

University Study Shows Oregon, Nation Thriving

Eugene—Most economic indicators show that both Oregon and the nation's economies are in good shape, according to a statistical summary contained in the current issue of Oregon Business Review, published monthly by the University of Oregon bureau of business research.

However, some contradictory signs still remain "which indicate room for doubt about the future," the article warns. The summary covers the period through June of this year.

Although output, income, and other economic measures show new high levels, the recovery of these measures from the low points reached almost a year and a half ago has been "very slow," and most national income measures have failed to reach the level expected of them by this date, the Review says.

Rising Employment

Employment in the state and the nation continued to rise in June, although the amount of increase "is not typical of a rapidly expanding economy," according to the article. Forty thousand more people were at work in Oregon in June than in May, although this was 5,000 less than in the previous June. This might be caused in part by a cool season which postponed some crop harvests, the Review points out.

Lumber Production

Lumber production for June in the Douglas fir region was below May of this year by a small amount and "quite substantially below" the previous June. Both orders and shipments were up in June over the previous month and year. Unfilled orders were down slightly, "but so also was the lumber inventory, which is a reflection of increased orders and shipments," the article states.

For the first six months of 1962 compared to the same period in 1961, fir production was almost the same, with orders and shipments this year slightly over 4 per cent higher than last year.

Housing Increases

Housing starts are increasing, the report says, and should number more than 1,300,000 nationwide in 1962, "but this has not provided the stimulus needed to firm up lumber and plywood prices even to the 1960 average level." In Oregon, June building starts were slightly down from a year ago.

Retail sales in Oregon have increased in 1962 over 1961, although, nationwide, these sales declined in June for the second month.

Bank debits in Oregon fell 7.7 per cent in June from the previous month and were 2 per cent below the previous year.

Mortgage money rates have declined in most areas of the nation, and this, coupled with higher interest being paid on savings accounts by commercial banks, has caused many bankers and savings and loan officials "to have some second thoughts" about rates being paid to depositors, the Review observes.

"If the situation continues, there may be a quiet but unmistakable trend to reduce rates paid to depositors," the article predicts.

Fertilizer Firm Head Surrenders

New York — (UPI) — Maynard C. Wheeler, 62, president of Commercial Solvents Corp., surrendered to police here Monday on an indictment charging that he and Billie Sol Estes conspired to violate antitrust laws in Texas and to fix the price of chemical fertilizer in West Texas.

The head of the Torre Haute, Ind., fertilizer firm turned himself in this morning and was taken to Manhattan Federal Court for arraignment. He was booked as a fugitive from Potter county, Tex.

Estes and R. E. Clements, another associate indicted by a grand jury in Potter county, surrendered to the Potter county sheriff Friday and were released on $10,000 bond each. Wheeler and Estes were indicted on identical charges, but Clements, an Amarillo, Tex., businessman, was charged with felony theft.

Informal Talks

San Sebastian, Spain — (UPI) — Spanish Foreign Minister Fernando Maria Castiella and Adlai Stevenson, U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, discussed world affairs Monday during informal talks here. Stevenson arrived in Madrid Sunday for a five-day visit as the guest of U.S. Ambassador Robert T. Woodward.

Marilyn Monroe Frightened; Given to Loneliness, Isolation

Editor's note: This is the first of three dispatches on the life and death of Marilyn Monroe, written by UPI Hollywood correspondent Vernon Scott who was her friend for a dozen years.

By VERNON SCOTT
Hollywood — (UPI) — Marilyn Monroe was more terrified of loneliness and isolation than anything else.

During the 12 years I knew the girl-woman she was always frightened — of people, her work, her fancied inadequacies and a dread that she was unloved.

Despite her robust curves and reputation as a love goddess, Marilyn was a wraith-like, spiritual girl given to loneliness and isolation. No matter where she was, no matter the number of people surrounding her, she was alone and scared.

It was the key to her chronic tardiness. She delayed until the final minute encounters with other people, socially and professionally.

Marilyn was admired, envied, worshipped, loved?

Marilyn thought not. But she was wrong.

Almost everyone who met her discovered something about Marilyn to love. Peculiarly, men who knew her found themselves feeling a protective, gentle affection for the blonde beauty, not at all in keeping with the sensual excitement she was supposed to elicit.

But Marilyn sought meaningful love all her 36 years, not recognizing love when it was lavished upon her. It was a tragic search which ended last Sunday before dawn.

The girl whose laughter rang like that of a child's, escaped her longtime fear in death, the only release she could find in her vain quest for security and a rightful place — a place of her own — in life.

The last time we talked was in her dressing room at 20th Century-Fox last June 1, her birthday.

Dressed in a robe and barefooted, she poured champagne into our glasses and giggled. "I don't feel a minute older than I did yesterday. Age is a state of mind, so I'm not ever going to get any older. I live for today. Tomorrow never comes and yesterday is all over. I try never to think about the past."

Was on Her Own
Born out of wedlock, she was unwanted, unloved. From the time she was a little girl, she was on her own.

When she was only 12 days old Marilyn was placed in a boarding home, the first of many. Vaguely Marilyn recalled that a crazed neighbor attempted to smother her with a pillow when she was two or three years old.

Another searing memory went back to when she was 6 years old and was raped by a man who visited one of her foster homes.

The skinny girl was always an outsider who lacked even a name of her own. Sometimes it was Norma Jean Mortenson (her father's surname) and at other intervals Norma Jean Baker (after her mother).

By the time she was eight, her mother, a one-time movie film packer, had suffered a nervous collapse and was made an inmate of a state hospital. The mother still is in a sanitarium.

With no one to pay for foster homes Marilyn was taken to an orphanage.

Study Conducted; Refutes Whyte's Organization Man

Eugene — Top executives show a relative lack of conformity to group pressures, according to a study by a University of Oregon professor.

The study by Dr. John B. Miner, professor of management at the university's school of business administration, is in reply to William H. Whyte Jr., author of "The Organization Man."

Whyte contended that among university professors conformity has won out but that the top level business executive remains relatively non-conforming.

By collecting psychological test data from samples of business executives and university professors, Miner concluded that Whyte was correct in his analysis of top business executives.

"In the academic world, on the other hand, he struck out," Miner wrote in an article in the "Administrative Science Quarterly." "An equal reduction in conformity characterizes university professors in the same age range."

Miner said that if the figures corrected for age are used, there is even less support for Whyte's conclusions. Neither executives nor professors appear to be particularly conforming or lacking in conformity relative to people of a similar age, he wrote.

"There appears to be both conformists and non-conformists among successful executives and university professors. Age rather than specific occupation emerges as a crucial factor in non-conformity,"

It also led to two more unhappy marriages, notably, and finally a tragic death.

Next: Marilyn becomes a star but fails to find anything at the end of the rainbow but fear and disappointment.

Several years ago she recalled, "They had to drag me by force. I tried to tell them I wasn't an orphan. They made me wash 100 plates, 100 cups, and 100 forks, knives and spoons."

Finally, when she was 11, a friend of her mother's provided a temporary home, but in a period of five years she lived with two different families.

Dream of Stardom

Of that period Marilyn said, "I amused myself with flights of fantasy. I dreamed of being a movie star or working on the stage."

There were no roots, no identification. There was only a child-like faith that somehow she would belong to somebody, somewhere.

As she grew into her mid-twenties Norma Jean's curves attracted the whistles of neighborhood boys. In a recent magazine story Marilyn said, "... I used to go to Grauman's Chinese theatre and try to fit my foot in the prints in the cement there."

The early dreams of stardom were lost in her marriage to aircraft worker James Dougherty. It taught 16-year-old Norma that she was unsuited for housework. At 20 she was divorced.

The early hardships left a chasm separating Marilyn's sunny personality from all who knew her — husbands, lovers and friends. At heart she trusted no one.

Full breasts, turned-up nose and wide-set blue eyes were her only attributes on the screen. She gave new meaning to the word "wiggle."

Brunette at first, Marilyn came under the guidance of musician Fred Karger (now Jane Wyman's husband) and agent Johnny Hyde, both of whom were romantically entangled with the hopeful young actress. Small roles in B pictures failed to encourage Marilyn. A featured part in "Asphalt Jungle" would have passed unnoticed had not the shapely newcomer made headlines by admitting she had posed for the famed nude calendar.

"I needed the money," she said, launching a legend that was to make her the most exciting glamour girl of her generation.

It also led to two more unhappy marriages, notably, and finally a tragic death.

Next: Marilyn becomes a star but fails to find anything at the end of the rainbow but fear and disappointment.

LIFE ENDS TRAGICALLY—Marilyn Monroe's life began in the downbeat squalor of cheap Los Angeles foster homes and ended just as tragically in one of its most glamorous suburbs. She was married and divorced three times: first to James Daugherty, upper left; then to Joe DiMaggio, center, and to Pulitzer prize-winning playwright Arthur Miller, lower left. (UPI)
