Los Angeles Family Takes Part in NPS Billionth Visitors

The Amit family of Los Angeles, Calif., Wednesday were among the billionth visitors to the national park system as they entered Crater Lake National Park through the Annie Spring entrance.

Mr. Amit was selected simultaneously with visitors in 191 other National Park Service areas to symbolize the billionth visitor. Selection of the Wednesday visitor was based on the precise time - entrance, which was 11:31 a.m.

Acting Park Superintendent Neal G. Guse explained it is virtually impossible to determine exactly which visitor to the National Park system was actually the billionth. However, statistical data by the service permitted the rangers to draw a reasonable conclusion that the billionth visitor would enter into Sharper Focus.

"Observance of billionth visitor day brings into sharper focus the importance of national parks to all people," Guse explained.

"It serves to emphasize the continuing need for protecting these areas for the use and enjoyment by the people now and by future generations as well," he noted.

ISLAND SIZE
Los Angeles - Santa Catalina island located off the coast of California is 22 miles long and ranges from one-quarter to seven miles wide.
