WW II, Korean Veterans Still May Get Loans

World War II and Korean Conflict veterans still have many years in which to apply for state veterans' loans, despite rumors to the contrary, according to Elmer W. Donahoo, Jackson county veterans' officer.

The deadline for World War II veterans to apply for a state loan is Jan. 31, 1980, and for Korean Conflict veterans, the deadline is Jan. 31, 1988, he said.

Entitlement to a federal GI home, farm or business loan expired for an estimated 25 per cent of World War II veterans July 25, according to the Veterans administration. For example, this deadline applied to an ex-serviceman who was released from active duty early in 1944 after two years of service.

A veteran can compute his own deadline by adding 10 years to his date of discharge and an additional year for each three months of war service, Donahoo said.

To meet the deadline in connection with a loan by a private lender, the VA must receive the loan application from the lender before the veteran's expiration date. The VA has advised lenders that it will consider an application to have been filed on time if it was received by the VA prior to the expiration of the veteran's entitlement, provided the application has been properly executed by the lender and the veteran, he said.

The VA told the lenders that if the supporting documents which usually accompany an application submitted to the VA prior to the expiration of the borrower's entitlement, the application may be submitted without the supporting documents. In such cases the VA office will defer action on the application pending receipt of the supporting papers, Donahoo said.

A veteran who plans to purchase a home in a VA direct loan area will have his deadline extended one year by addressing an informal letter of application to the Portland regional office of the Veterans administration, provided the request is received before his loan entitlement expires.

Direct loans are not made in Multnomah and Washington counties, and only for farms in Clackamas, Marion and Linn counties. Other areas excluded are Lane county except for the coastal fringe, Polk county east of Pacific Highway West, and the city of Klamath Falls.

Regardless of service period, a veteran or his widow in one of the following classes will have eligibility up to the final World War I deadline of July 25, 1967:

- A veteran released on grounds of service-connected disability from active duty, World War II.
- A veteran who had previously secured a GI home loan but whose entitlement has been restored due to his need for disposing of the original home for reasons beyond his control.
- An unremarried widow of a veteran who died from a service-connected disability during active duty.
- An unremarried widow of a veteran who was discharged for a service-connected disability.

Eligibility of those who served during the Korean conflict does not begin to expire until Jan. 31, 1964, Donahoo noted.

Reports Indicate Ozone Generators Purchased in Area

Police reports from both Medford and Grants Pass indicate that a salesman operated in both communities during the latter part of July and early August peddling a device called an ozone generator.

Information from the Portland Better Business Bureau, according to Medford Chamber of Commerce Manager Don McNeil, indicates that the sale of these devices is an old story. Peddlers often work on nursing homes and old people who are sometimes led to believe these generators are healthful and may cure a number of ills, McNeil noted.

"This is not true," he warned. According to the state board of health, ozone is a toxic gas that is irritating to the mucus membrane of the upper respiratory tract and in sufficient quantities can cause headaches and dizziness.

According to the state board of health information, ozone does not control odors, McNeil said. It merely gives the appearance of odor control by dulling the odor-perceptive senses.

"We are apprehensive," McNeil said, "that a few of these generators have been peddled in the area and are in use at the present time."

Training Sessions Start for Crusade

Ten speakers and five trainers met Friday morning for the first training session for the United Crusade speaker's bureau.

Adam Richter, 1961 UC campaign chairman, conducted the session. Clubs desiring speakers to explain the UC have been asked to contact Harold Cook, executive secretary, at 773-4287.

Several division chairmen have obtained all of their section heads, according to Robert D. Heffernan, UC campaign chairman. They include Robert E. Nelson, forest products; J. Russell Acheson, pub-

A veteran can compute his own deadline by adding 10 years to his date of discharge and an additional year for each three months of war service, Donahoo said.

The VA has advised lenders that it will consider an application to have been filed on time if it was received by the VA prior to the expiration of the veteran's entitlement, provided the application has been properly executed by the lender and the veteran, he said.

You Gussed it - Chimney Swifts Prefer Chimneys

Having feet and legs but not being able to walk is no handicap for the bird commonly called the "chimney swift."

There was a peculiar old belief that this bird is colored like smoke because of the habitat in which it lives. Up until a few hundred years ago the swift lived and nested in hollow trees, but later found an unused chimney just as good, if not better. The hollow tree would seem better than the inside of a dirty chimney, but the smoke-colored chimney swift seems to prefer chimneys. There's just no accounting for the preference of some people - or some birds.

Any deserted house or abandoned factory whose smokestack is left standing becomes a focal point for all the chimney swifts in the neighborhood.

Specially-Built Tail

The chimney swift has the tail for chimney living. On the end of each tail feather is a spine-like process that wedges into the crevices of a brick chimney or the inside of a hollow tree, enabling the bird to hitch itself slowly up in a series of jerks. Somewhat different from the stiff tail-feathers of the woodpecker, the swift's feathers are spine-tipped - more spur-like than prop-like.

About the only part in the weak feet and legs play in locomotion is to hold on for a second while the spines in the tail grip the surface. On a flat surface the poor thing can hardly walk at all.

The chimney swift is closely related to the hummingbird but looks more like the swallow. The swift has long, pointed wings, and is known to travel speedily and gracefully. Some observers claim the bird easily does 60 miles an hour - probably one reason why part of the common name is "swift."

Four Species

There are at least four species of swift in North America. They feed entirely on insects caught in the air while the bird is in full flight.

The chimney swift plasters its peculiar little nest against the inner wall of the chimney or on the wood of the hollow tree. It's a shelf-like structure composed of small sticks and twigs, mixed with saliva produced by the bird. Into the nest are deposited four or five white eggs.

Early in the fall, the chimney swifts leave for their winter home in South America, usually preceding other migrant birds in their southward flight.

But they will return - late the following spring after the robins and some of the others have arrived and when insects are again available - to take

Material Is Being Collected for Fair

Produce and material is now being collected for Jackson county's booth at the Oregon State Fair in Salem beginning Aug. 31.

For the past six years, the Jackson County Pomona Grange has been in charge of the booth, according to Master Robert Bitterling.

Bitterling said the committee, headed by Delmar Smith of Central Point, is now making final plans for the booth. Dee Hendrickson is in charge of the land products display.

Anyone who has produce they would like to display at the fair has been asked to contact either Smith or Hendrickson. Fruit, grain and vegetables are among the acceptable products. Produce must be received at the Crater Rock museum in Central Point by noon Tuesday, Aug. 28. Transportation from there is provided.
