Small Worlds Around Us

By LYNN M. WATKINS

(Register and Tribune Syndicate 1962)

Remember, the Harmless Bull Snake is a Friend

Blotched heavily with black markings on a brown or yellowish brown body and in some instances as long as six feet, the bull snake creates a morbid fear in those who fail to realize it is a harmless snake, and as a result he is killed on sight.

The fact the average bull snake seldom lives to attain over four or four and a half feet detracts nothing from the fear most folks hold for him.

The bull snake is pretty well distributed throughout the entire U.S., but known by different names in different sections. In the middle section of the country bull snake is the accepted name, but in the south and east it is known as the pine snake, merely because it is usually found in pinelands. In the west the bull snake is called the gopher snake. There is some difference in size and coloration.

Lighter in Color

The pine snake is somewhat smaller and lighter in color. In the gopher snake the overall color is more yellowish. All, however, have similar habits and characteristics.

All are beneficial, harmless and docile, but just the fact they belong to the constrictor family tends to scare some people. Just the mention of the word "constrictor" conjures up visions of the powerful coils entwining a living body, slowly crushing it to death.

Also, the bull snake makes a noise when angry — a loud, hissing sound — and strikes as if it really could be dangerous. All these features are conductive to false impressions on the part of an uninformed observer, who kills the snake on sight and later may find he has destroyed a very beneficial agency in rodent control; for these snakes feed entirely on mice, rats and other rodents.

Nose Plate

The bull snake is well adapted structurally for ground burrowing, either for a place to rest while it digests its meal, or for the underground pursuit of a ground squirrel, gopher or rat. It has on the top of its head a heavy, bony nose plate which assists greatly in burrowing.

The bull snake, because of its size and aggressive actions, has always been a favorite reptile in carnivals and side shows, and is usually billed as a very dangerous snake.

The audience gapes in awe at the reptile and will pay an admission price to see this American constrictor — the harmless, almost affectionate bull snake.

Three People Hurt In Ashland Mishaps

Ashland — Three people were hospitalized here Sunday following week end accidents, according to city police.

About 2:50 a.m. Sunday, a vehicle operated by David Charles Elliott, 22, of 129 Granite st., struck a light pole on North Main st. at Helman st. Police said he apparently went to sleep at the wheel.

A passenger in the car, Miss Carol Meehan, 22, of Roseburg, suffered back injuries and Elliott suffered facial lacerations, officers said. Both were taken to Ashland Community hospital and were in good condition this morning, hospital officials said.

Vehicles operated by John Alvin Lovell Jr., 17, of 437 Beech st., and George Washington Handy, 65, of 2145 Crestbrook rd., Medford, collided about 5:20 p.m. Sunday at North Main and Coolidge sts.

Police said Handy was cited for violation of basic rule. Mrs. Erma Lovell, 43, mother of the youth, reportedly suffered a whiplashed neck and was taken to the hospital.

Mushroom Crop Damages Street

London —(UPI)— The Morpeth village council ordered a local street resurfaced after mushrooms sprouted through the pavement, causing potholes and cracks.

"It is something I never heard of before," said John Wilkin, a surveyor. "But they have ruined the road and the job must be done. We are getting crops every few days, but after pushing their way through the tarmac they are not much good to eat."

Veteran Editorial Artist Succumbs

Portland —(UPI)— Howard Fisher, long-time editorial artist for the Oregon Journal until his retirement in 1956, died Saturday as the result of a stroke.

His editorial cartoons were nationally known. They carried his "Little Beaver" trademark.

Fisher, a bachelor, was born Sept. 12, 1890, in Santa Fe, N.M. He joined the staff of the Journal in 1919.

Reasonable Reasoning

Hollywood Picketing of Capitol Seems Perfectly Rational Event

By DICK WEST

West

Washington —(UPI)— The Hollywood mind at work is always strange and wonderful to behold, particularly to those of us who live in the East and don't get many opportunities to observe this phenomenon. One such occasion arose last week when a company representing Columbia Pictures arrived on Capitol Hill to film scenes for the movie version of the Broadway musical "Bye Bye Birdie."

I paused briefly to watch proceedings and, being unaccustomed to that mode of thinking found myself not only dazzled but momentarily blinded by the brain waves that flashed about the cameras.

Assembled before the capitol were 60 teen-age girls carrying picket signs. They were supposed to be staging a protest demonstration because the Army had drafted their rock-and-roll singing idol.

If you took this scene and captioned it "What Is Wrong With This Picture?" a number of answers would be readily apparent.

In the first place, when you want to protest something in Washington, you don't picket the Capitol. You picket the White House.

Picketing the White House is part of the American tradition, like Grandma's gingerbread and jumping off the Brooklyn Bridge. In fact, you don't have to be protesting something to picket the White House. A lot of people do it just for the exercise.

In the second place, picketing at the Capitol is illegal. Demonstrators who try it are immediately rounded up and marched into the Senate chamber where they are forced to listen to a three-hour speech on the European Common Market.

You can bet they don't try it again.

In the third place, the purpose of a picket line is to attract attention. Sixty teen-age girls marching in front of the Capitol would hardly be noticed at all.

Everyone would assume they were high school seniors on a sight-seeing tour.

For these reasons you and I might think that the Capitol makes a rather illogical setting for a picket scene. To the Hollywood mind, however, it seems perfectly rational.

Members of the film company explained that when they're shooting a scene in Washington, they want it to look like Washington. And what looks more like Washington than the U.S. Capitol?

It's hard to find fault with that kind of reasoning. If they ever make a movie of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," I assume they will use the Taj Mahal.

Jackie Instructs Sister on Skis

Ravello, Italy —(UPI)— Jacqueline Kennedy gave her sister, Princess Lee Radziwill, a water skiing lesson today.

Mrs. Kennedy left the villa here shortly before noon to travel to the Conca dei Marina beach house by car and boat. The first lady immediately changed into a flowered, one-piece bathing suit and went water skiing.

She did a wide, graceful circle outside the Conca dei Marina cove. After about eight minutes of gracefully executed slaloms, she threw in the line.

Princess Radziwill tried it next. She managed one-third of the course and then sank somewhat less gracefully into the bay of Salerno.

NO TAKERS

London — (UPI) — Plans by Britain's ban-the-bomb "Committee of 100" to hold a mass sitdown protest outside the Air Ministry next month were in trouble today due to the lack of potential participants. Lord Bertrand Russell, 90-year-old philosopher chief of the movement, issued a plea for 7,000 persons to show up Sept. 9 but added, "It does not seem at all likely we shall get that number."

Festival Plays

Tonight: "Henry IV, Part II."

Tuesday: "As You Like It."

Wednesday: "Coriolanus."

Thursday: "Comedy of Errors," "A Thieves Ballad."
