Police Academy Move Suggested

Salem - (UPI) - A suggestion to move Oregon's police academy from Camp Withycombe to Salem has been made to the Highway Interim Committee by Lee Bown secretary to the advisory board on police standards and training.

Bown, retired Oregon state police deputy superintendent, told the committee that many more beginning police officers could be trained if the sessions were held here. Facilities of the Oregon Correctional Institution and the Oregon State Penitentiary also could be used in training.

Facilities at Withycombe are good but limited, he said.

Bown, in his report to the committee, said one group of 35 officers already has completed a two-week course at the camp and that another group will train during September.

The academy, now limited to officers with less than one year of service and from smaller cities, was set up under a statute passed by the 1961 legislature which created the advisory board.

Anchor Chain Snapped Peace Corps in Reverse Might Be Good Idea for United States

By DICK WEST
Washington - (UPI) - A House appropriations subcommittee has just published some testimony given at its hearings on the Peace Corps budget.

I was about midway through the volume when my thoughts suddenly snapped their anchor chain and began to drift off in another direction.

If the Peace Corps is a good thing for the United States, I asked myself, why wouldn't it be a good thing for other countries to have one as well?

I mean, wouldn't it be nice if other countries began sending us teachers and technicians to help us out in matters in which we are deficient?

Offhand I can think of a number of ways that this would work to our advantage. Someone like Sargent Shriver undoubtedly could think of a good many more.

Suppose, for instance, that Italy had a Peace Corps. It could send a delegation to America to help us improve our pizza pies.

There is no denying that we are backward in the pizza field. The ones I have been served would make good auto hubcaps, but as comestibles leave much to be desired.

Then consider that we now have to import our Scotch whiskey. If Scotland would send a few Peace Corpsmen to the hills of Kentucky, I dare say they could soon have our moonshiners turning out a domestic blend that would pass for the real thing.

U. S. taxi drivers are another group that could use some foreign assistance. Their horn honking technique can only be described as primitive when compared to that heard in many European cities.

If France formed a Peace Corps and recruited a few Paris cab drivers for duty in the United States, I am confident they could increase our decibel count almost overnight.

Del Norte County Invites Chamber To Road Ceremony

An invitation to attend the ribbon-cutting ceremonies of the Winnemucca-to-the-Sea highway in Lakeview Sept. 21 and 22 was extended to the Medford Chamber of Commerce Roundtable at its Monday noon luncheon.

Traveling from Crescent City, Calif., to tender the invitation was Gladys Sanders, interim office manager of the Del Norte Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Sanders told the Roundtable that buses have been chartered to carry a group from Crescent City to Lakeview for the highway dedication. The buses will leave Friday morning and arrive in Lakeview in time for a buffet dinner at the Elks club Friday evening, she said.

Urged to Join Tour

The speaker urged persons in this area who are interested to join the tour when the buses pass through Medford. Additional information and reservations may be obtained by contacting the Medford Chamber of Commerce office.

Mrs. Sanders pointed out that the part of the highway which is now completed will cut about 200 miles off the trip between Winnemucca, Nev., and Crescent City.

Roundtable Member Herb Lennox told the group that about 25 to 30 persons from the chamber greeters' committee plan to attend the ceremonies. The greeters plan to camp out Friday night about halfway between Medford and Lakeview, Lennox said.

Battery Russell Transfer Proposed

Washington - (UPI) - Rep. Walter Norblad (R-Ore.) said Monday he has introduced a bill to transfer jurisdiction of Battery Russell near Fort Stevens State Park in Oregon's Clatsop county to the Oregon Highway commission's parks division.

The State Game commission presently has jurisdiction.

Norblad said the Oregon highway group wanted to acquire title to Battery Russell and Fire Control Hill area for public use under the park system.

Under a previous bill the area was conveyed to the State Game commission on condition the property be used only for conservation of wildlife. Otherwise, the land would revert to the federal government.

Norblad's bill would allow the parks division of Oregon to take it over.

We likewise are still one of the underdeveloped nations in the use of small foreign-built cars. They are used here primarily as a means of transportation, which is an outmoded concept.

Peace Corps instructors from Hong Kong or Rome or Rio de Janeiro could quickly teach us that these cars can be employed to better advantage in chasing pedestrians off the streets, and sometimes off the sidewalks.

Small Worlds Around Us

By LYNN M. WATKINS
(Register and Tribune Syndicate 1962)

Maybe Windmills Will Rise Again

Mostly we look upon the windmill as a holdover from the days of the horse and buggy. For the last decade or so the wind has been only a disturbing agency, something to stir up dust, dry clothes, straighten out a flag, or as a temperamental power to propel sailboats, or for a small boy to sail a kite in.

Even on farms and lonely ranches the windmill now is considered old-fashioned, and has just about been replaced by rural electrification.

The age-old possibility of harnessing the wind as a source of power has intrigued the imagination of inventive men for ages, and found its highest perfection in the old windmill. But the uncertainty of the wind's constancy and force discouraged the adoption of more elaborate wind machines, and we have turned to water power instead.

Store It

The old bugaboo of a fickle and temperamental wind can be easily licked today, merely by storing the power when it is available, for use when the wind does not blow. Storage batteries are a common enough piece of equipment, and if the need were created, large batteries, the size of a house, could be built, in which the power could be stored.

Contrary to what you may believe, there are relatively few days during an entire year when a dead calm prevails; not over four days in any year are completely windless. Of course, there are seldom any two periods when the same wind force is present. It may blow from a mile an hour to a hundred miles per hour, but the average will be about 10 to 15 miles per hour for the year. Here is a great deal of power going to waste over our heads; cheap power that could do a tremendous amount of work. A power that never tires, and for which there is no charge.

It would be silly to believe that wind-power alone would run a factory, but it would be a willing helper, and as one half of an "electric-wind" team would cut costs pretty severely. By storing the power generated during the night, when the shops are closed, enough power would be stored to last at least part of the following day.

Wind Everywhere

There are no windless areas on the face of the globe. Everywhere winds of varying force are moving across the earth. The manufacture of windmills is cheap; less than one-fifth that of machines necessary to convert a river bed into a power plant. And rivers of sufficient strength that can generate ample power are becoming scarce. We are going to need some other source, aside from atomic energy, to furnish our increasing demand for more power.

Now, before you make up your mind that I am talking through my hat, let me hasten to report that perhaps this idea isn't so wild or silly as it seems. No lesser agency than the United Nations has a proposed program of power development by means of wind machines, on its agenda for the immediate future. The program calls for wind-power to be used as a willing half of a team, such as fuel or water power.

It would be ironic indeed if this modern world would someday erect glorified windmills to help turn the wheels of industry. Sometimes basic and fundamental truths are the surest means to a definite end.

One Week of Plays Remain at Ashland

Ashland - One week remains before the 1962 Shakespearean festival closes its doors for the season.

Six performances of the plays, "Comedy of Errors," "Henry IV, Part II," "As You Like It," "Coriolanus," and "A Thieves Ballad," given in rotation, are yet to be seen.

Approximately 37,753 persons had attended the festival as of Sunday evening. This is 3,925 fewer than had attended at the same time last year.

Good seating remains for all performances of "Henry IV, Part II" and "Coriolanus," "Comedy of Errors," "A Thieves Ballad," and "As You Like It," are sold out for the remainder of the season.

Patrons are, however, invited to purchase standing-room tickets on a first come - first served basis at 6 p.m. at the Festival box office on the night of the performance.

Following the Sept. 2 performance of "Coriolanus," "The Players' Last Good-night" is staged - a brief ceremony of closing. The entire company appears on stage, equips itself with lighted tapers, and rims the audience area.

One actor delivers Prospero's haunting "Our revels now are ended" speech, and the Company sings a special version of "Greensleeves." The lights fade to blackness, there is a pause, a final applause, and the house lights rise to signal the end of the Oregon Shakespearean Festival season.

Ticket information may still be obtained at the central box office, by writing "Shakespeare," Ashland, or by visiting one of the branch box offices located in principal population centers throughout the Pacific Northwest.
