

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

WHEN SARAH BERNHARDT, the great French actress, was touring Nevada, she was interviewed by an alert and attractive young reporter named Sam Davis, who told her, "I'm doing this not only for my own paper in Carson, Nevada, but for the San Francisco Examiner, and the United Press."

Miss Bernhardt was delighted with him, and when he rose to go she kissed him first on each cheek, then squarely on the lips. "The right check for your paper in Carson," she explained, "the left for the Examiner, and the lips, my friend, for yourself."

Davis took this tribute in stride. "Madame Bernhardt," he announced impressively, "I also represent the United Press, which serves over 60 papers west of the Mississippi River alone."

There's a man in the Chicago weather bureau named Charles Fairbanks! Furthermore, Mr. Fairbanks received this message recently from a suburbanite in Glencoe: "Dear Mr. Fairbanks: I thought you'd like to know that I have just shoveled eleven inches of Partly Cloudy off my driveway."

"What a pity," sighed a mother of seven, "that you can't treat your first child like the way you treat your first pancake: just throw it away!"

In the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS

The news as this is written? It's hodgepodge. Reading it, one is reminded of this stanza from Lewis Carroll's "The Walrus and the Carpenter":

"The time has come," the Walrus said,
To talk of many things—
Of shoes—and ships—and sealing wax—
Of cabbages and kings—
And why the sea is boiling hot—
And whether pigs have wings."

WHAT of cabbages? Well, they got into the news the other day. Like this: British scientists have discovered a process for making milk WITHOUT A COW. They use pea pods. CABBAGE LEAVES and weeds. And they hope to open a pilot plant this year with large scale production of their new drink following later.

HOW do they do it? Dr. Frank Wokes, research director of the British vegetarian research center at Watford, in Hertfordshire, explains it thus:

"We can produce the milk from almost all greenstuffs. We have been using carrot tops, outer cabbage leaves and pea pods. Weeds, nettles, and all the hedgerow growths have been used very successfully. The process? Roughly it is to mash green leaves in water warmed under controlled conditions until the protein is separated. Vitamins, minerals, vegetable fats and carbohydrates are then added. The vitally important vitamin B-12 must also be introduced. I think there is a great future in this."

WHAT of the proof of the pudding—which is the eating thereof? Here's a testimonial: Lady Dowding, wife of Air Chief Marshal Lord Dowding, Battle of Britain leader back in war days, says: "It's simply delicious; much nicer than ordinary milk!"

PITY the poor dairyman, who rises before the dawn to milk the cows—or at least he used to, before milking machines were invented. Look what he's up against now. And—Pity the poor taxpayer—who will have to pounce up for the subsidies that will be required to enable the dairyman to meet this new form of competition.

THEN there's this trip to Venus that is already under way by an American robot. And the descriptions of the robot and how it works. And what Venus may be like if and when we get there with a man. And how a man will live in a climate where temperatures supposedly range from 600 degrees above zero to 38 degrees below zero—all, maybe, in the same day?

How do you reckon Lewis Carroll would have described that—if the subject of traveling to Venus had come up in his day?

HERE'S a possible sample from his Jabberwocky: "Twas brillig, and the slithy toves Did gyre and gimble in the wabe: 'All mimsy were the borogoves, And the mome raths outgrabe.'"

AT LEAST it would be about as intelligible as most of the speculative pieces in the papers telling how we're going to get to Venus and what we're going to do AFTER we get there.
