NEW HOPE FOR MENTALLY DISTURBED

The millions of persons who at times are mentally disturbed or have a loved relative who is disturbed will find hope in the splendid article on the family treatment of psychoses, prepared for a recent number of The Saturday Evening Post by my good friends, those able science writers, Milton and Margaret Silverman.

Alvarez

They tell of the recent revolution in psychiatric practice. After 40 years of refusal to face the obvious fact that many disturbed persons have much trouble at home, trying to adjust to the vagaries and scoldings of one or more relatives, many psychiatrists are at last changing their ways of practice, and are beginning to insist that the patient bring his relatives to the interviews at the office.

Usually these relatives protest that they are all right, and need no help, but when they come in, and perhaps one of them promptly gets into a bitter argument with the patient, it becomes obvious that some of the persons in the home need psychiatric treatment almost as much as does the man (or woman.)

Then the psychiatrist may see that the unhappy patient cannot get well or stay well until his odd relatives have been taught to stop annoying him, or accusing him of having cost them much money because of "his foolishness." The family must learn to help the doctor and not to hamper him in his work.

Decided Reversal

This "family treatment" marks now a decided reversal of psychiatric policy. During the last 20 years or more, I have talked to a number of wives of mentally disturbed men who had gone to be psychoanalyzed. When without much study of the situation the analyst said to the man, "Your troubles are all due to your wife," the poor woman hurried to see the analyst to find out wherein she had failed.

As she said, if she was in the wrong, she was anxious to mend her ways and to help in bringing about her husband's recovery. But in every one of the cases in which I was later consulted, the analyst sent out word that on principle he would not see the wife, and would not discuss her husband's problem with her. I know very well that there is some sense to this because the husband and wife are likely to twist the psychiatrist's words so as to make it appear that he was in sympathy with them. It is dangerous to talk to the two separately, and much safer to talk to them together.

According to the authorities quoted by the Silvermans, the results of the new family group treatment are not always spectacular, but in many cases they are much better than are those obtainable by treating the patient alone. I am happy to hear about this new method of treatment because for half a century I have been using it successfully. I have always talked to members of the family, to see what they are like and to get them to co-operate with me. Hundreds of times I have almost cured a patient by getting an unreasonable father or mother to "lay off of him," and treat him with more kindness and sympathy and understanding.

My life-long research in this field of medicine began in 1912 when into my office came two emotionally disturbed women, each with a mentally retarded child. I soon found that one of these women had an insane sister, a mentally retarded sister and a badly adjusted brother; the other woman had an alcoholic brother, a "town drunk" uncle and an a sexual sister.

Kept Making Notes

These people got me so interested in the different ways in which a tendency to mental troubles can show up in the several members of three or four generations in a family that I kept making notes, and in 1958 I published a big book on what actually happened in the way of neuroses and psychoses to the members of 673 families I had come to know well (Practical Leads To Puzzling Diagnoses – Lippincott).

This book is so full of fascinating information about the many interesting symptoms or illness that can show up in the "relatives of the psychotic" that it would be of great help to the new school of psychiatrists who are now treating the oddities of the relatives of their patients.

Obviously, all persons who are so mentally disturbed or poorly adjusted that they feel the need of medical help should try to find the type of either old-fashioned or "new-fashioned" psychiatrist who will gladly interview and study the whole family, and will plead with the more eccentric and difficult and irritable relatives to calm down and stop nagging at the patient.

In my last book, Minds That Came Back (Lippincott) I told of men who, when they went home after discharge from a mental hospital, soon returned to it, saying that they were much happier with their old buddies in the convalescent ward than with their parents and brothers at home.

Often the patient's family doctor can say which of the several psychiatrists in the city is most likely to help in this new and sensible way.

To know how you can help a member of your family who is stricken with mental illness, read the booklet, "When Mental Illness Strikes a Family," by Dr. Walter C. Alvarez. To obtain it, send 25 cents and a stamped, self-addressed envelope with your request to Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Dept. MMT, The Register and Tribune Syndicate, Box 957, Des Moines 4, Iowa.

4 Persons Drown As Car Leaves Road

Kittitas, Wash. – (UPI) – Four persons drowned late Wednesday night when their car went off a lonely country road about five miles east of here and plunged into six feet of water in an irrigation ditch.

The victims were Alfred Valdez, 22, Judy Vernon, 16, Sharon Smith, 16, all of Kittitas, and Raymond Yanez, 17, Indio Calif.

The lone survivor, Larry Eslinger, 21, Ellensburg, Wash., said he heard the other victims struggling to get out as he made his escape.
