

State Schools 'Tool Up' To Begin Unique Oregon Program

Salem—(UPI)—Oregon schools are "tooling up" to use the unique Oregon program. The $3.5 million Ford Foundation grant program is being launched in many Oregon schools this fall.

In a progress report for United Press International, Oregon program director Allen Lee of the state department of education said agreements have been signed with most of the 25 school districts and all but one of the eight colleges that will participate.

Already, Lee said, some 20 school districts and private Oregon colleges not included in the program have asked to join.

But, he said, the program will be limited at first to the original schools. In three or four months, he said, some additional schools may be included. "Right now we're swamped."

Of the colleges slated to be in the program only Pacific university has not yet signed an agreement. Lee said a conference with the school will be scheduled soon and an agreement signed.

Working with Pacific will be four elementary and high school districts in Forest Grove and Hillsboro. These district agreements will be made after the university is signed up.

Contracts with two districts — Coos Bay and Coquille — to work with Oregon State university still are pending. Districts in Beaverton and Corvallis already have contracts with OSU.

Colleges signed up besides OSU are the University of Oregon, Portland State college, Southern Oregon college, Eastern Oregon college, Linfield university and Oregon College of Education.

These colleges will work with districts in Eugene, Bethel, Roseburg, Springfield, La Grande, Pendleton, Milwaukie, Portland (including David Douglas), Medford, McMinnville, Dallas, Lake Oswego, Salem and Stayton.

Reed college is working in the intern program with the Portland schools under a separate grant.

The new program seeks to improve teacher training and to modernize curriculums in local school districts. The first year's $970,000 grant from Ford was turned over to the education department July 1. The grant funds are being matched by state and local school district money over a four-year period.

Practically all the money will go for manpower, Lee said, and none will be used for buildings and school equipment.

The program is attracting nationwide attention, he said proudly, with many states writing for information.

"Everyone who has become familiar with the program," he said, "has embraced it with open arms." Almost no reluctance to accept it has been encountered from school administrators and school boards.

Lee said the emphasis of the first year will be on training local teachers to supervise intern teachers. "Several score" of supervisors will be schooled at a series of workshops planned around the state.

The interns, who will spend one of their five college years teaching under supervision, earn $3,200 to $3,600 if they work full time. None will teach less than half time.

The supervising teachers face a tougher job with the interns, Lee said, than with the cadets the interns are replacing. The interns will receive a greater amount of direct supervision from their college and from local supervisors.

About 35 interns will start teaching this year, he said, but the number will grow to 200-300 in three years. While the intern portion of the program is growing cadets also will train.

No significant changes yet have been made, Lee said, in college teacher training curriculums. The Oregon program calls for college training to shift toward the liberal arts and away from traditional "methods" courses.

The practical experience of internship, Lee said, will eliminate the need for some of the standard courses.

He said Dr. Bill Ward of the Southern Oregon College education department has taken a year's leave of absence to work with the education department and the colleges on curriculum.

A definite willingness by colleges to discuss and make changes has been noted, he said.

The proposed changes are, after all, he said, those that many educators in colleges have been wanting to make for a long time.

The entire Oregon program is, he said, a collection of educational changes made possible by the Ford grant. If they are successful, he said, Oregon education will move a generation ahead in a few short years.

McNamara Avows U.S. Can Handle Soviet Challenge

Washington—(UPI)—Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara, briefing senators on world trouble spots including Cuba, said Wednesday the United States can handle any Soviet military challenges.

McNamara and Secretary of State Dean Rusk provided what was described as an optimistic assessment of U.S. strength to a joint meeting of the Senate Foreign Relations and Armed Services committees.

The session lasted three hours, and much of the discussion centered around the mounting Cuban crisis caused by the Soviet buildup there.

One Republican senator, George D. Aiken of Vermont, said afterwards he was a "little discouraged" about both the world situation and Cuba.

But Chairman J. William Fulbright (D-Ark.) and Armed Services Chairman Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.) said they agreed with the generally optimistic tone of the briefing.

Rusk and McNamara, however, both warned that the Free World faces a long, continuing struggle with the Soviet bloc.

Russell said "I have never had any occasion to doubt that we have the potential to destroy Russia and nobody knows that better than the Russians."

Not all of the senators appeared satisfied with U.S. policy toward Cuba and many voiced concern about the situation.

Aliens Born After 1925 Must Register

Aliens born on or after Sept. 15, 1925, who have entered the United States on a permanent visa, are required to register with the local selective service board.

An earlier story in the Mail Tribune had the year 1924. Aliens in this group are required to register with the board within six months after arriving in the country.

The selective service board also reminded young men that registration is necessary even though they are members of a reserve unit of the armed services, and they must have proof of birth and name, either a birth certificate or similar document, the board said.
