

Gov. Hatfield Opposed to Federal High Dam on Snake River

Salem, (UPI) — Gov. Mark Hatfield told the U. S. Senate public works committee Thursday in a statement he is opposed to federal construction of the high mountain Sheep Dam on the Snake river between Oregon and Idaho.

Hatfield said he opposed "authorization and construction of high mountain Sheep Dam, or any dam, by the federal government, when private industry is ready, willing, and able, to construct the identical dam and integrate its operations into the federal and non-federal dams now existing in the Columbia river basin at no cost to the taxpayer."

The statement was presented for the governor by Tom Murray, public works consultant to the department of planning and development, in Washington, D. C.

Members of the Pacific Northwest Power Co. are seeking to build the dam.

At the same time, Hatfield called for approval of four federal flood control projects in the Willamette Valley: Strube Creek on the McKenzie, Gate Creek Dam on Gate Creek, Fern Ridge Dam on the Long Tom river and Cascadia Dam on the South Santiam river.

The four projects are included in an amended U. S. Army Engineers division report of June, 1958, on development of Columbia Basin water resources. The report, reviewed and changed several times since 1958, is being studied by Congress for possible authorization of power and flood control projects.

Hatfield said the high mountain Sheep Dam should be constructed as soon as possible. He said in opposing federal construction of it that "my argument is not private versus public power per se; my argument is for the earliest and fullest use of both private and public funds."

He said private construction of the dam would assure a supply of power to private utilities in Oregon. He said since Washington has a larger number of public utilities than Oregon, Oregon private power companies are at a disadvantage in a power shortage as public utilities have first call on federal power.

The governor said he agrees with the engineers' major water plan in so far as it provides increased water and flood control. But, he said he is "displeased" that two navigation projects have been dropped from its recommendations.

They would make the Columbia-Snake navigation project 14 by 250 feet at minimum regulated water flows and would extend navigation to Rock Island Dam in Washington.

The added navigation facilities can be justified, he said, by the fact that river tonnage has increased after every major navigation improvement.

Hatfield termed the Columbia system of dams "not a well-balanced system" at the present time. He said greater amount of storage for flood control regulation and hydroelectric power is needed as well as the "enhanced facilities for navigation, conservation, recreation and reclamation which will result from major dam developments."

He said, "we realize that we cannot have the maximum power supply potentially available from the Columbia river system and still have the maximum conservation of its fishery resource."

That is why, he said, he favors the Mountain Sheep project over near-by alternate Nez Perce dam site. The Salmon river, a salmon and steelhead spawning area, empties above the proposed Nez Perce Mountain Sheep site.

INSPECTS CRUSHED CAB—An unidentified state highway patrolman inspects crushed cab in which Mathew L. Roehrich, 36, of Eureka, Calif., was killed earlier this week. Roehrich's truck hit the rear of the slow-moving lumber truck in a rear-end collision that resulted in a massive traffic jam on US 101 at the height of the morning commuter rush. (UPI)

Pre-Enrollment Plan At SOC Clarified

Ashtand — The new pre-enrollment program started this summer at Southern Oregon college has caused some apprehension to prospective freshmen, college officials have announced.

This was brought to the attention of the college administration, which hopes to clarify the matter.

The pre-enrollment program was designed to aid incoming students by relieving tension caused by many new students enrolling at one time, officials said. Although more than 400 students have pre-enrolled, there are still places available for students who can qualify to the normal requirements needed.

Power Company Takes Fight To Congress

Washington — (UPI) — An official of the Pacific Northwest Power company Thursday carried the company's fight for the High Mountain Sheep Dam to Congress.

Kinsey M. Robinson, company president, told a Senate Public Works subcommittee C. O. ngress should reject a recommendation by Interior Secretary Stewart L. Udall for federal construction of the Snake River dam.

Applications for Absentee Ballots Are Now Available

Applications for absentee ballots will now be received by the elections department of the Jackson county clerk's office, County Clerk Marvin Madden has announced.

Generally, any registered elector of Oregon who has reason to believe he will be absent from the county of his residence on election day, or whose residence is more than 15 miles from the polling place in his voting precinct may apply for and receive an absentee voter's ballot, Madden noted.

Applications will not be accepted during a five-day period prior to the election except in certain situations where physical disability or an emergency may prevent the voter from attending the polls.

Applications for absentee ballots will be received on election day from persons who have become ill, been involved in an accident or other physical disabilities and are unable to attend the polls.

Persons called into involuntary service in connection with a natural disaster may apply and receive a ballot, Madden noted.

Applications on election day must be accompanied by an affidavit either from an attending physician in the one case or a person authorized to require emergency service in the other, he noted.
