

Ruling Exempts Some Teachers

Salem—UPI—The State Board of Education has decided to exempt certain persons from its new requirement that grade school teachers must have five years of college training before they can be certified.

The exemption covers those who put in at least one year of teaching in the five years of holding a basic certificate. This means that only those who were granted a certificate and then did not teach for five years will have to take a fifth year of training before their certificate can be renewed.

The policy is effective until altered by the board. The board also voted to ask the 1963 legislature to let the board set the salary of the state superintendent of public instruction. His salary now is set by statute.

Research Team To Try Mount Everest Climb

Washington—UPI—The first attempt to plant the United States flag on the summit of 29,028-foot Mount Everest is being planned for next year.

An 18-man team sponsored by the National Geographic society will carry out extensive scientific research on the mountain, which is the world's highest.

Robert F. Kennedy Gives His Views On Enforcement of Anti-Trust Laws

(Editor's note: President Kennedy promised during his election campaign that the anti-trust laws would be enforced vigorously. He named his brother, Robert F. Kennedy, as attorney general to do the job. In recent months Robert has been accused of going to two extremes—being either too harsh with big business or too lax in enforcement to try and temper business hostility toward the administration. Robert Kennedy tells how he feels about it in the following exclusive interview with United Press International.)

By WILLIAM J. EATON
Washington—UPI—Att. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy sharply denies that his enforcement of the anti-trust laws has been either too tough or too soft toward big business. The President's brother has been under fire in financial circles and business publications on grounds the Department of Justice has gone to harsh extremes to whip some segments of business into line. He and his chief trust-buster, Lee Loevinger, also have been accused of easing off on anti-trust prosecutions because of the national economy's sluggish behavior and to end some of the big business hostility toward the administration.

"We've done a good job, and we've done it with vigor," the 36-year-old Robert told UPI. "But I am sure there are improvements to be made and I hope in the next two years we'll do better."

He shrugged off one charge of "extremely unsatisfactory performance." This was leveled at him and Loevinger by a university professor who testified before the Senate-House economic committee.

Kennedy said most academic critics talked in generalities but made no specific suggestions. "Quite Nebulous"

As to complaints of drastic enforcement, the attorney general said they were "quite nebulous" when examined.

He was asked whether it was true that some anti-trust actions had been deferred because the business picture was below standard. "No case has been turned down because of it," he replied. But he added that if a recession developed it might be a factor in determining whether to proceed in some cases. Kennedy told the American Bar association convention recently that anti-trust law was the "most technical and complicated field" under his supervision. He said it required "deep study" before suits could be filed. But it was his intention, he said, to protect the free enterprise system by insuring that competition will prevail in the market place.

A justice department official said in this connection that there is a tendency to play down anti-trust actions. It was speculated that this stemmed from Kennedy's reaction to charges made after the President's steel price increase rollback last April that the administration is anti-business.

Convened Jury The attorney general convened a federal grand jury during the steel price crisis to determine whether firms which raised prices $6 a ton had conspired beforehand or whether there was a tendency toward monopoly in the industry.

"All the evidence is not in and the study is continuing," Kennedy said. Other sources said the grand jury still was emmeshed in the industry's long-time pricing practices.

Perhaps the biggest case brought during the Kennedy administration was indictment of General Motors corporation on charges of using illegal methods to capture 84 per cent of the nation's locomotive business for its electromotive division.

The indictment, returned less than three months after the New Frontier came into office, obviously was prepared during former GOP Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers' tenure. GM has denied the charges.

Robert A. Bicks, former anti-trust chief who brought the famous electrical industry conspiracy cases, was in office when a record-high 90 cases were filed in 1960. This compared to 60 in 1961 and 73 during the fiscal year ending last June 30.

Signs But Loevinger and his aides pointed to the following as signs of the Kennedy administration's "vigorous" attitude: — The department for the first time sought to use the anti-trust laws to block or upset bank mergers.

— Government lawyers set a precedent when they filed eight lawsuits claiming damages from the electrical companies convicted of price-fixing. They also negotiated the highest settlement in anti-trust history — $7.4 million — with General Electric Co.

— For the first time in history, a comprehensive report on identical bids submitted to federal, state and local government agencies has flashed "warning signals" of possible sales collusion on products ranging from asphalt to zinc oxide.

— The number of lawsuits filed to dissolve or prevent mergers that allegedly would choke off competition rose last year to an all-time peak of 19.

"Pro-Business" Loevinger said these and other measures were "profoundly pro-business" since they are pointed at preserving the competitive system.

Two-thirds of the 1,200 complaints received each year come from businessmen, he said.

Liberal economists have contended the justice department should break up giant firms in basic industries—auto, steel, chemicals—to prevent illegal concentrations of power.

To this, Loevinger replied that size alone is not sufficient to trigger anti-trust action. He said there also must be a showing of tendency toward monopoly or substantial restraint of competition, before the laws can be invoked. In addition, he pointed to indictments against U.S. Steel and Bethlehem Steel for alleged price-fixing for forgings and civil suits against Ford, General Motors and Chrysler on a variety of charges.

Some observers believe anti-trust policing does not vary a great deal no matter who controls the White House. They say lengthy preparations required before the filing of suits and long trials and appeals make it difficult for any administration to make a distinctive anti-trust impression in less than two or three years.

If that is true, the cases to be brought during the remainder of this year and in 1963 may provide a better gauge for assessing the Kennedy administration's record.

TRUSTBUSTER — Assistant Attorney General Lee Loevinger, above, is Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy's chief trustbuster. Kennedy and Loevinger have been accused of easing off on anti-trust prosecutions because of the national economy's sluggish behavior. (UPI)

Survey Shows Women Listen To Baseball

New York—UPI—A recent study by SONY corporation at Yankee stadium found 784 women listening to transistor radios during a baseball game.

An estimated 2000 other sets, owned by boys and men, also were in operation.
