Pigeon Reporter On Eastern Newspaper

Homestead, Pa. — UP — The Telstar satellite is making communications history in space but the Homestead Messenger has some innovations itself for airborne delivery of the news.

When several troops of Boy Scouts from this Monongahela river valley steel town near Pittsburgh went to camp recently, the Messenger arranged for a local pigeon breeder to send some of his birds along with the Scouts.

Only 38 minutes after the Scouts arrived at their Laurel mountain campsite, in the highlands about 55 miles east of here, a pigeon winged its way back to its loft in Homestead.

"All 109 boys and nine leaders from 10 troops arrived safely . . . read a message carried by the bird."

On each of the succeeding days the Scouts were in camp, a report on their activities was flown back to Homestead by a pigeon and promptly printed in the Messenger.

"A.T. and T. has its Telstar, we have our homing pigeons," says Paul W. Houck, assistant to the publisher of the Messenger.
