Medford Sailor on Kearsarge Describes Pick-Up of Schirra

"He made it and we made it!"

This is the way Radio Seaman William D. Deckard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul W. Deckard, 904 Summit ave., Medford, described the successful completion of the six orbital flight of the Mercury capsule.

Deckard is serving aboard the support aircraft carrier USS Kearsarge which recovered U.S. Astronaut Walter M. Schirra Jr. and the Mercury capsule from the Pacific ocean Oct. 3.

The seaman described in detail the activities of the day as they concerned personnel aboard the Kearsarge in a letter to his parents. Deckard joined the Naval Reserve Electronics division in Medford in November, 1959, and went on active duty aboard the USS Kearsarge in February, 1962.

It was 1:15 a.m. aboard the carrier when the rocket left Cape Canaveral.

"We sure are happy," the seaman wrote after the successful shot. "My ears are glued to the speaker, this shot is something personal!"

"We are in direct communication with Cape Canaveral and the astronaut," he wrote. Immediately after the lift off a voice over the speaker said, "Attention all hands, the astronaut has left Cape Canaveral for the Kearsarge."

"I don't know how the rest of the men feel, but I feel rather excited," Deckard wrote his parents. "I'm part of a history making event and I know it, but somehow I don't feel the way I think I should, whatever that is supposed to be."

"The capsule landed only four miles away from the USS Kearsarge, just off the port (left) bow. Out of 40 ships in the project, we were the one to pick up both the astronaut and the capsule, the first carrier yet to do so."

"Immediately after the landing we rushed toward him and launched the helicopters. The captain maneuvered the ship so we could bring the space capsule aboard. The whole boat put the ropes into position and a winch pulled the space craft aboard."

"You should have heard the ovation!"

"The capsule was hoisted on board with the crane and lowered onto mattresses put into a little cradle built for it."

"Officials ordered the people around the capsule away. When everyone was out of danger and all was quiet, there was an explosion and the hatch opened. The NASA officials gathered around to see how Commander Schirra was.

"Nothing moves for a while, then you see a hand come out of the capsule, then both. Next you see his helmet then the rest of his body as he inches out. He seems to be trying to climb to the top of the space craft. His foot comes out, then the other as he steps onto the deck."

The seaman wrote that an opening was made from Elevator 3 to sick bay (ship's hospital) that was lined by Marines.

"Men are packed all along the way so they could get a glimpse of Schirra. He passed right by me - he sure looked good in the space suit."

Deckard was able to take pictures of both Schirra and the space capsule during the time they were aboard the Kearsarge. The ship headed for Hawaii after picking up the astronaut and after a few days at Pearl Harbor proceeded to Long Beach, Calif.
