

Beetles May Boost Storm's Timber Loss Much Higher

Corvallis - Oregon's large timber loss during the recent windstorm may be just the beginning of what could become major losses of valuable trees from bark beetle attack, according to Oregon State university forest entomologists.

The large amount of wind-throw left in the wake of last week's storm will provide breeding locations and food supply for beetles that will emerge next March or April. Dr. J. A. Rudinsky, OSU forest entomologist, predicts heavy losses from beetle attacks in 1964 unless salvage logging can begin immediately and proceed swiftly.

Salvage logging removes the dead and down timber, cutting the emerging beetles off from their food supply. Record of Last Storms The Pacific Northwest's last big windstorms in 1949 and 1951 unleashed a beetle attack that ruined 3 billion board feet of timber, enough to build 300,000 homes. Beetles killed one-quarter of the 12 billion feet of timber lost in 1949-52 catastrophe.

The beetles which will emerge next March or April will head for trees to deposit their eggs, entomologists point out. Healthy trees can usually ward off moderate insect attacks: Dead and down trees, or trees seriously weakened, provide ideal breeding spots. With good food supplies and plenty of growing room, the next generation that emerges in spring 1964 will produce a beetle population that will overwhelm even healthy trees, it was noted. There are control measures other than salvage logging, according to Rudinsky, but none are as economical or practical. Fast, efficient salvage logging can save many trees to help provide Oregon payrolls for years to come.

Registered voters who plan to vote in the Nov. 6 election by absentee ballots must return or mail the ballots in sufficient time so the elections department receives them by 8 p.m. on election day.

The reminder was issued by the Jackson county elections department. Residents have until Nov. 1 to apply for absentee ballots, it was noted, but Oregon law requires that the ballots be received by the elections department prior to the time that the polling places close.

Local officials said that a staff member is at the Medford post office on election night just prior to and at 8 p.m. to pick up the ballots. Absentee ballots are counted by a special counting board following election day.

County Clerk Marvin Madden stressed that applications for the ballots should be made as soon as possible. In cases of unexpected illness or involuntary service, in such cases as repairs in disaster areas, exceptions are made to the Nov. 1 deadline for applying for the ballots.

Residents in doubt about qualifying for absentee ballots should contact the elections department in the county courthouse, 773-6211.

Teachers from four southern Oregon counties are expected to attend. Held annually, the ASCD conference will be held Wednesday evening and Thursday morning.

Gilbert A. Mack, principal of Patrick and Hanby schools, Gold Hill, will preside at the Wednesday session, and Warren W. Cook, curriculum director for Grants Pass schools, will preside at the Thursday morning session. Dr. Flanders will give special addresses at both meetings.

Dr. Flanders received his doctor's degree in educational psychology from the University of Chicago. He returned recently from a year in New Zealand on a Fulbright research grant.

Washington - (UPI) - President Kennedy has signed a measure designed to prohibit sale and interstate shipment of gambling devices.

The measure would extend existing restrictions on interstate transportation of slot machines and apply them to coin machines designed to provide a payoff and to such gambling equipment as roulette tables and the like.

The new law also would clarify and enlarge the categories of individuals who are required to register and file reports on commercial transactions involving gambling devices. It requires that the reports and records be available for inspection by federal authorities.
