Many Oregon Schools Fail To Administer Aptitude Tests

Eugene - About one out of six of Oregon's junior and senior high schools fail to administer tests of their students' scholastic aptitudes and achievements. This finding has been made public by Dr. J. Francis Rummel, professor of education at the University of Oregon and director of the Oregon Cooperative Testing Services (OCTS) in the OCTS Bulletin this fall.

The OCTS, headquartered at the university school of education and staffed by university faculty members, is the only organization of its kind in the Northwest. It was established in 1953 by various educational organizations in the state and began operations the following year.

The OCTS offers test planning, rental, scoring, evaluation, and interpretation, as well as special consultation services, to any school in the state at nominal cost. Its services have recently been expanded and improved with the acquisition by the university of a new IBM 1620 electronic computer which makes possible new and faster test reports.

While some schools fail to administer tests, "it is obvious that (others) are doing too much testing indiscriminately and that they should be doing more testing for the types of information that teachers can do something about and will do something about," according to Dr. Rummel.

The survey of testing in Oregon's secondary schools was made in the spring of 1961 by O. C. Christensen of the Oregon state department of education. The survey shows that 16 per cent of junior high schools in the state do not administer any scholastic aptitude tests, 60 per cent use one test, 23 per cent use two tests, and one school uses a test three times during the three years of junior high school.

The situation in the senior high schools "is even worse," according to Dr. Rummel, since 15 per cent do not use aptitude measures and 45 per cent are using more than one during the four years of high school.

"From these reports," he wrote, "it is obvious that some schools are using scholastic aptitude tests more often than would be necessary and some are not making any use of aptitude measures."

In the area of achievement tests, which are measures of educational development and should be administered annually to every pupil, the survey showed that "a sizable percentage" of students are tested in grades 7, 8, and 9, but the percentage drops off "considerably" in the last three years of high school.

"Only 33 per cent of the junior high schools and only 19 per cent of the senior high schools use achievement batteries each year," Dr. Rummel reported.

All of the junior high schools use an achievement test at least once at that level, but 16 per cent of the senior high schools reported that they do not use any standardized achievement test.

"Certainly there is a pressing need in Oregon for an intensive and extensive in-service training program for the personnel in the junior and senior high schools who have the responsibility for the development and administration of the schools testing program," Dr. Rummel observed.

"It is highly conceivable that many schools have a good program of testing, but are somewhat weak in test use and interpretation," he added.

"A concentrated program of training in test analysis and interpretation may also be in-

Wall Street Scans Crisis in Hopes Trend Continues

New York (UPI) - Wall Street resumed its watch on the Cuban crisis today in hopes that the rising trend on the stock market could continue. In trading which drove the tickers late for the third consecutive day, the market Wednesday put back $9 billion in paper values onto the listed issues. Commodity futures, up on Tuesday, dropped Wednesday.

A rally, starting with an upward trend from about noon on the blossoming in the final 90 minutes, put 18.62 points on the Dow-Jones average of 30 industrial stocks. Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks rose 1.72 to 55.21, and S&P said the increase figured out to a gain of more than $9 billion.

Movements in Tuesday's market demonstrated again the sensitivity of the trader to the tense international situation arising from the United States declaration of a quarantine on shipment of offensive arms to Cuba.

Trend at the start was downward, but then rumors began that some of the Soviet vessels moving toward Cuba had changed course, thereby lessening the chances of a showdown on the United States' search procedures.

Late in the day a Defense Department spokesman acknowledged that some Soviet bloc ships apparently had changed course but others were still aiming for their original destination.

Three States Set Tighter Controls On Stock Thefts

Salem - Tighter controls against thefts of livestock were developed the past week by livestock officials of Nevada, Idaho and Oregon at a conference in Winnemucca, Nev., according to Roy K. Nelson, livestock division chief of the Oregon Department of Agriculture.

Nelson says the three states agreed to exchange bulletins on animals reported stolen and on brand inspection violations. He reported persons taking animals into any of the states without proper brand inspection will be reported back to the state of origin for possible prosecution.

Sixteen attend - Sixteen officials, including Sheriffs Robert G. Ingram of Malheur county, and Eldon Sitz, Burns, of Harney county, attended the conference. Stan Routsou, Nevada brand inspection supervisor, headed the Nevada delegation and assistant chief of brand inspection service, Claud Salders, Boise, was spokesman for the Idaho conference.

In addition to reaching accord on interchange of information on livestock losses, the group also discussed back tagging and trace back programs.

Theft problems in the three states are somewhat similar, Nelson reports. He said Nevada officials were particularly impressed with the cooperation in Oregon between the state office, county sheriffs and the state police in matters of illegal movement and theft of animals.

Norblad Doubts Russia Will Fight Over Cuba

Portland - (UPI) - Rep. Walter Norblad (R-Ore.) said today he feels that the possibility of Russia going to war over the Cuban situation is extremely remote.

Speaking to the Oregon Bankers association he said "they are as fully aware as we are that all-out nuclear warfare means virtual world destruction. They well comprehend that this kind of warfare means complete destruction of their families and homes as well as ours."
