World Geared To Married Couples Leaves Bachelors in Sad Plight

By DICK WEST
Washington - (AP) - I have been married so long I sometimes forget how the other half lives.

A reminder came my way the other day in the person of a young man - about town whose passion for a nymity prompts me to refer to him here as Sam Freeloader.

I didn't think that Freeloader had a care in the world, but when he stopped by my desk it was plain to see that something was troubling him.

"You are justly revered for your willingness to take up the cudgels on behalf of worthy causes," he said. "Why don't you write something about the plight of bachelors?"

"I wasn't aware that bachelors were in need of aid and comfort," I replied. "It seems to me they have the situation well in hand."

"Not so," said Freeloader. "Everyone knows about the problems that left-handed people have. The world is set up for the convenience of right-handed people. It's much the same way with bachelors."

"The world is set up for the convenience of married people. There is an organized conspiracy in America to make bachelor life untenable."

"That is a serious charge," I said. "Do you have any evidence to support it?"

"Take such an ordinary necessity of life as bread," Freeloader said. "Bread only is sold in large loaves. If a bachelor doesn't get an invitation to dinner and is forced to fix something to eat in his apartment, he's got to buy a whole loaf of bread."

"It may be two weeks before he dines at home again. By that time the bread will be moldy and he has to buy another loaf."

"Pie is the same way. Did you ever try to buy a single slice of pie?"

"That is indeed a severe hardship," I said. "Are there other handicaps?"

"Almost all appliances are anti-bachelor," Freeloader asserted. "Look at the refrigerator. It has a lot of space for food, which we don't need, and a small compartment for ice cubes."

"Why can't they make a refrigerator that is 90 per cent ice cubes and 10 per cent food? Why can't they make a bachelor-sized loaf of bread?"

"I can see your point," I said. "Anything else?"

"Yes," he said, bitterly. "Just once I would like to find something that isn't cheaper by the dozen. There ought to be some things that are cheaper if you only buy one."

"You might as well face it," I told him. "The only thing cheaper in the singular form is a wife."
