Family Council

Editors note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of a family disagreement presented to the Council. The Council deals with problems, major and minor, encountered by guidance counselors and social workers. Edited by Mrs. Alma Denny. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Hermine S.—I want our Sunday visits to my in-laws to stop.

Irving S.—Their whole week revolves around our call.

Hermine S.—I realize there are special problems when you marry an only child. That's why I've gone along with our custom of Sunday-afternoon-at-Grandma's for 12 years now. Normally I'm a peace-loving gal and I'm only rebelling now because of our children and friends.

Giving up every single Sunday for my in-laws has had some sad results. Our friends can't ever get us to a barbecue or picnic and have stopped inviting us. Our four children are growing older and, after the first hello, grow frightfully bored sitting around. And Irving can't join a bowling club he likes, because the tournament playoffs are on Sundays.

I say let's cut down on the trips and leave some Sundays open.

Irving S.—Picture my aging parents on a Monday. They begin thinking of our next visit to them, six days hence. Mom wonders what to serve us for supper, and Dad helps her set the house to rights after the six of us have tramped through the rooms.

It may be a sacrifice but brightening their week this way is the least we can do. Dad is a retired school teacher. Mom is the quiet type, and their lives revolve around me, Hermine and their grandchildren. There's nothing they wouldn't do for us.

Things are not as bad as Hermine paints them. We get to see our friends during the week. And I can bowl Tuesday nights.

The Council: Ritual may be all right as a religious tool, but it can turn human relations into an empty shell. Those processions and recessions of the young S. family, occurring week after week at the same hour, have become robot-like. Grandma and Grandpa wind up the mechanism and the others dance.

We suggest that the schedule be immediately modified to every other Sunday, and that once the elder S's find they can survive and even thrive without the seventh-day shot-in-the-arm of visiting children, they might even experiment and skip two Sundays in a row.

These parents appear possessive and unjust. Their son is caught up in a net of immaturity and guilt feelings. The compulsive visits keep him forever their "little boy." It's about time he spoke up like a big boy. Why shouldn't he have a chance to join a bowling club and fraternize with fellows of like talents over the weekend? Why shouldn't Hermine and the kids join other families for Sunday afternoon outings? That's the best time, often the only time, for families with children to join forces for double fun.

If the parents are mobile, take them along occasionally. Break up the old routine of hello, what's new, let's eat, good-bye.

As Hermine points out, the regular visiting habit grows irksome to children once they pass the high-chair, play-pen stage. What's in it for them? Hours of being seen and not heard, if they want to please their elders. Even though they are learning to sacrifice and to be kind, they need not have the lesson drummed into them the same way week in and week out. They can be kind to Grandma and Grandpa in many other ways—by writing to them, telephoning, sending them snapshots. Handmade handwork like raffia picture frames and clay kittens can be labored over lovingly as gifts for the elderly couple.

If "there's nothing they wouldn't do for us," as Irving says, how about asking them to make him a gift of a few free Sundays?

Chandler Drew Is Elected To Council

H. Chandler Drew, route 3, box 69D, Medford, today was elected to serve as a member of the venerable plywood division of the wood products section of the National Safety Council, according to a council in Chicago, Ill.

The election was part of the National Safety congress which opened Oct. 29 and will convene through Nov. 2.

Drew is safety director of the Medford corporation.
