Statistics Found To Be Interesting

Columbus, Ohio - (UPI) - A state liquor department employee had some interesting information in explaining to a board which controls state finances how his department uses computers to keep tabs on liquor sales.

Among the miscellaneous bits of information he gave the board: liquor sales usually double during the first two weeks in an area where there is a strike; gin sales are highest in summer; gallon size bottles of whiskey sell like mad around Ohio State university during the fraternity rushing season, and five women in the computer section of his department are pregnant.
