Portlander Cited After 3 Accidents

A Portland man was cited for failure to leave information at the scene of an accident yesterday after he was involved in three separate accidents in the space of a half hour, according to Medford city police.

Cited was Jack Floyd Russell, 56. Following the collisions, he was allowed to post bail and was taken to Rogue Valley hospital for treatment of a laceration on his hand. Police said Russell was the driver of a car which struck and damaged the Loop-O-Plane concession at the Medford Shopping Center about 4:53 p.m.

As Russell and the operator of the concession, William Ralph Blake, 303 North Fir st., were driving to Russell's motel to discuss insurance arrangements, he was involved in a minor collision at Jackson st. and Riverside ave. about 5 p.m., police said. Driver of the other car was Ruth Irene Griffin, Jacksonville. Still en route to his motel, Russell was involved in another accident about 5:15 p.m., police said, at Jackson st. and Central ave. Russell's vehicle collided with cars operated by Robert Camas Thomen, 51, of 2306 Table Rock rd., and Mark David Bogart, 37, White City. Officers said Russell left the scene of the accident without leaving proper identification.

Bargain Time Returns For European Travel

By RALPH VILLERS New York—(UPI)—Bargain time for visiting Europe is back again.

Combined with generally reduced hotel rates, cheaper car rentals and considerably fewer of your own countrymen prowling the streets and sights of the Old World is the 17-day transatlantic excursion fare which went into effect Oct. 1. This is the third year for off-season airline fare which offers up to a 136 reduction, depending on point of departure and type of aircraft, from the regular year-around transatlantic round-trip economy fares.

The so-called "off-season" bargain rates are effective through next March 31, when ostensibly the heavy seasonal travel to Europe gets going again.

Opponents The 17-day excursion fare has its opponents in the professional world of travel. Their chief arguments are against the 17-day limit on travel the time is too short, they say, plus the contention that the reduction from normal fare isn't big enough.

It's unlikely the proponents of lower prices and longer time limits—which includes several of the Atlantic-crossing airlines themselves—will get their wish in the immediate future. An effort late last year to extend the time a traveler could spend abroad and to put the lower fare on a year-around basis came to naught when the often cumbersome International Air Transport association disapproved it.

The pros-and-cons of the fare debate aside, if there is a bargain time to go to Europe, this is it. A $136 saving is not to be ignored even if the trip must be completed within 17 days. (The day of departure, even if aboard a late evening flight, and the day of arrival back in the U.S., even if just after midnight, count in the 17 days.)

Hotels abroad are less crowded, and generally rates drop to keep the rooms filled. Off-season car rental rates are up to 25 per cent less than during the summer.

And practically all of the Atlantic air carriers, working in conjunction with large wholesale travel agencies, offer cost-easing package tours in connection with taking their flights overseas.

For instance, one airline is offering a two-week visit to London, including round-trip air fare (prop-jet plane), hotels, breakfasts and unlimited bus and subway travel in London for $399.

Another has a $582.45 package that includes jet round-trip, hotels, transfers, breakfasts and sightseeing that touches Glasgow, Edinburgh, London, Amsterdam, Brussels, Paris, Geneva and Copenhagen.

A third advertises six cities in five countries, Munich, Cologne, Amsterdam, London, Brussels and Paris, with hotels, meals and sightseeing for $520, including the round-trip jet flight. All three trips assume a New York departure.

Group Fares The 17-day excursion fares have no effect on the current experimental group fares, by which parties of 25 or more can make the jet round-trip New York to London for $300, to Paris for $326 or Geneva for $349.

But now, under the excursion fare, an individual can jet from New York to London and back for $350, compared to the on-season jet economy fare of $486. Some other samples, with the regular fare from New York in brackets: Copenhagen $425.60 ($501.90), Lisbon $350 ($486), Munich $432.80 ($568.80), Paris $389.60 ($525.60), and Rome $484.30 ($620.30).

Taking a propeller or prop-jet flight from New York saves the excursion traveler $112, instead of the $136 saving on jets. Some round-trip examples from New York would be:
