In the Day's News

As previously related in this space, when Columbus landed in 1492 on the little Caribbean island of San Salvador, he thought it was an outpost of the fabulous Indies-so he called the Salvadorean natives Indians. The name has stuck ever since.

But San Salvador was a very small speck of land - and Marco Polo, one of the early world travelers, had described the Indies (Cathay was the name he used) as a very large country. So Columbus set out to find bigger land. His search led him to Cuba, which was bigger than San Salvador - so much bigger, in fact, that Columbus thought he had it made.

With an escort from his ships, he headed inland seeking the city of Peking and the Emperor of China, so that he might present to him a letter of introduction from King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain.

HE DIDN'T find the emperor of China, but he did find men SMOKING CIGARS. The cigar business, you see, is an old business in Cuba. It was 470 years ago that Columbus, the first Cuban tourist, paid his visit to the Pearl of the Antilles.

Another story has it that in addition to tobacco leaves rolled into a cylinder Columbus found the Cuban natives smoking Y-shaped pipes. They put the tops of the Y-shaped tubes in their nostrils. The burning tobacco was in the hollow stem of the Y, and the natives inhaled the smoke. The pipe was called a "tabaca."

Hence the origin of the word tobacco.

THERE is no record to indicate that Columbus brought home any of his fragrant leaves, but a century and a quarter later the first English settler in the New World was founded at Jamestown, in Virginia, and here the English settlers found the Indians smoking this same weed that Columbus had reported from Cuba.

John Rolfe, who married the Indian Princess Pocahontas and took her home to England, where she became a social sensation, learned the tobacco habit from his Indian relatives by marriage, and carried it home to England with him. He smoked his tobacco in a conventional pipe with a long stem, and most school children are familiar with the tale that his valet came in one day and was shocked to find smoke pouring from his master's mouth and nose. Horrified (so the story goes), the servant dashed out of the room and came back with a pitcher of water which he poured over Rolfe's head to put out the fire.

SO FAR in the history books, the smoking of tobacco seems to have been confined to pipes or the cigars rolled from tobacco leaves reported by Columbus from Cuba.

That brings up cigarettes. How did they get started?

THE STORY goes that in the Crimean War - it was at the battle of Balaklava, in the Crimean War, that the Six Hundred made their famous charge ("Into the Valley of Death rode the Six Hundred") - that English and French officers found the Turks smoking "little cigars" made of tobacco wrapped in paper. (The Turks, incidentally, "rolled their own.")

The French officers promptly named them cigar-ettes - the suffix "ette" being a diminutive in French - meaning "little cigars."

So there you have the story of how cigarettes came into the world.

PNB Commercial Manager Named

Jack D. Perry has been named Pacific Northwest Bell's Southern Oregon district commercial manager by G. R. Lord, the company's general commercial manager.

Perry, formerly the commercial training supervisor in the Oregon area headquarters for the telephone company, took over his new duties Nov. 5, according to Jack Cregar, local manager. Perry succeeds John M. Helrich, who was appointed general tax representative for the company in Portland.

Perry's telephone career began in 1943 in Portland shortly after he graduated from the University of Oregon. His first job was as a telephone representative.

Later Perry was appointed a business office manager and was successively a personnel supervisor and directory engineer.

In his new assignment, Perry will direct the company's commercial operations in the Southern Oregon district. His office will be in Eugene.

11 Persons Injured As Bus Leaves Road

Baker, Calif. - (UPI) - Eleven persons were injured Monday when the right front tire of a chartered bus carrying 27 persons blew out and the vehicle careened off the highway and hurtled 200 yards across rugged desert terrain.

All aboard - members of the Riverside Tour club - suffered at least minor bruises but 11 required treatment at Barstow Community hospital.

California highway patrolmen said bus driver Earl Reed, 30, Riverside, prevented the bus from overturning by maintaining control of the big vehicle after the blowout and steering it off the road away from oncoming traffic.
