Forest Products Research Discussed at Conference

The expenditure of $500,000 annually for forest products research is an investment in the future of Oregon and can result in a tremendous expansion of our basic industry, according to B. Sam Taylor, Elk Lumber company.

Taylor, chairman of the forest products advisory committee to the Forest Research Laboratory, Corvallis, urged even greater expenditures in research as the lumber industry strives to maintain present markets and expand into new ones.

Taylor's comments were made at a recent meeting in Medford attended by members of the forest products advisory committee, the forest land management advisory committee and administrative personnel from the Forest Research Laboratory. Ralph Brindley, Medford, is chairman of the land management committee. Others in attendance included State Senator Lynn Newberry, State Representative James Redden and interested members of the Southern Oregon Conservation and Tree Farm association.

The forest industry representative noted that 85 per cent of the half-million dollar research budget is secured through the forest harvest tax paid by the private lumber companies at the time the trees are harvested. Ten per cent is received by allocations from the general fund and five per cent is the result of grants and gifts to the Forest Research Laboratory, located on the Oregon State university campus.

Status Change

The recent change in administration of the laboratory from an independent status to an affiliation with Oregon State University has been beneficial, Taylor noted. It has served to complement the work of the Forest Science department at the university and will eventually result in even greater research benefits, he predicted.

Dr. Rudy Kalendar, director, Forest Research Laboratory, outlined general areas of research conducted by the omy of the state of Oregon.

Dr. Kalendar outlined the cooperative efforts of other agencies, both public and private, in the field of forestry research and marveled at the tremendous potential resources offered by these groups. It makes possible, he said, studies of the most fundamental nature as well as those aimed at solving immediate, practical problems of the forest products industry.

Reports by Dr. Bever on forest land management and engineering research and Dr. Lief Espenas on forest products and silvicultural research completed the laboratory presentation.

Roseburg Mother Confesses Robbery

Salem — A 21-year-old mother of two was being held in Clackamas county jail in Oregon City after confessing the Oct. 26 armed robbery of a South Salem supermarket.

Mrs. Sharon Rose Hibbard, Roseburg, told police she robbed the store to get money for her children, ages 4 and 3. Police said $277 was taken from Erickson's supermarket. She was arrested Friday night near Oregon City at a roadblock set up after a man pulled an armed robbery of a supermarket in that area.

Mrs. Hibbard denied any knowledge of that crime. Police held her on a vagrancy charge, and on Sunday she confessed to Salem officers she had committed the Salem robbery.

She told detective Wayne Parker she had never been in serious trouble before. The Salem robbery occurred while her husband, Gordon, 29, was being detained in Roseburg jail awaiting trial on a federal charge of burglary of a bank at Oakland, near Roseburg, Sept. 30.

Mrs. Hibbard was being held on $10,000 bail.

Man Identified as Portlander Found Dead

Baltimore — The body of a man tentatively identified as John H. Robinson, 55, of Portland, Ore., was found today in a junkyard.

Police said the victim apparently burned to death after building a fire to keep warm.

Man Questioned About Slayings

Los Angeles — Police continued questioning John Donahue, 26, La Puente, Calif., today about several unsolved Los Angeles area slayings.

Donahue was brought from Portland, Ore., where police said he confessed slaying former actress Helene Jerome, 50, in her Hollywood apartment more than four years ago.

Investigators said Donahue left his La Puente home about a week ago following an argument with his wife.

Northwest Oregon Stream Rise Expected

Portland — The weather man today forecast rapid rises in streams of northwest Oregon and southwest Washington for the next one or two days.

The Santiam river at Jefferson was at a reading of 11 feet, four feet below flood stage, at 8 a.m. today. The Willamette at Salem was 7.5 feet, up 2.4 feet in 24 hours but far below flood stage.

First Concert of Season Held; Pianist Presented

By R. D. WERNER

For its first concert of the 1962-63 season the Jackson County Civic Music association presented Jorge Bolet, pianist.

Bolet is a tall and sturdily built man and it is well that he was using a concert grand instead of the school piano. We do not believe the old faithful could have stood up long under the pianist's formidable efforts.

Beginning with a "Rondo, Op. 51" followed by a "Sonata Op. 110" by Beethoven, it soon became evident that great volumes of tone and heavy climaxes were to be the fare. With an abundance of technique, not always the cleanest, and over-use of the sustaining pedal, much of the music was over-played. The characteristic left-hand rolling figuration of Beethoven's piano music was written for an instrument of much less sonority and power than the one in use today. Modern pianists on the whole disregard this fact and consequently the harmonic structure becomes thick and muddy.

"Variations and Fugue on a theme by Handel, Opus 24" by Brahms was next. This is the sort of thing in which Brahms had no superior. Variations were the greater part of his musical thinking and was the basis of most of his composing. This work, though not so well known as the Haydn variations for orchestra, is nevertheless a most ingenious composition and Brahms and Bolet exploited the piano to its fullest.

After such heavy going, it was time for intermission. Two early works of Franz Liszt opened the second half of the program and although not great music, it did let some air in and a little light. More pianistic and not so orchestral in conception, it is an attempt at tone painting. Good music for a piano virtuoso to display his skill.

Waltzes from "Die Fledermaus" by Strauss by the great pianist Godowsky closed the program. Bolet evidently enjoyed playing this piece and he did so brilliantly, although not with the greatest clarity. The bubble and effervescence of Vienna were not present as often as they should have been. But for the audience it was what they had been waiting for. The applause was prolonged. One auditor even shouted a few "bravos."

Bolet responded with a nocturne and an etude by Chopin — real piano music. The atmosphere was now clear, although it was raining outside. The pianist used a Baldwin concert grand brought from Salem, with arrangements made by the Lusk Piano company here.
