New Official of Plywood Group Reviews Plans

Tacoma — New plans to strengthen the plywood industry's marketing position in the competition with nonwood building materials are being laid out by the Douglas Fir Plywood association as the result of a series of introductory meetings for James R. Turnbull, DEPA's new executive vice president.

Turnbull, who assumed his duties Oct. 29, has just completed meetings with about 400 industry executives in 10 towns stretching from Everett, Wash., to San Francisco. He met with lumber officials in Medford Nov. 2. These informal meetings were aimed at helping him learn more about the specifics of the industry and also served as a forum for his suggestions on marketing improvements.

DEPA manages a $7.3 million annual budget subscribed by about 130 members mills and serves as the research, promotion and quality control arm for the industry.

Turnbull urged the industry to pay more attention to what the customer wants to buy and less attention to what it is convenient to produce.

"Our industry has tended to decide what it wants to make and then gone looking for a buyer. In the future, we intend to go to the marketplace to find out what is needed and then develop products to fill the need.

"A buyer will take a product off your hands if you make it cheap enough for him, but he'll pay more for something he really needs"

Turnbull said the industry, already a $500 million factor in the annual economy of five western states, can continue to grow at its present rate only if it concentrates more on marketing and on research and development.

School Budget Tells Quality of Program In Terms of Money

By DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist

During the approaching months, much planning will go into the development of local school budgets. In many cases, you will be voting to express your approval or disapproval.

A budget is the translation of the quality and curriculum of a school in terms of money. The preparation of a budget involves the entire school staff. It represents buildings, salaries, equipment, etc.

A properly prepared budget is developed from the needs of professional and non-professional employees. The superintendent of schools, after extensive discussion and evaluation, compiles a proposed budget which he presents to the board of education. Board members examine the recommendations in order to control the total cost, maintain a balanced program, and consider the effect on their educational philosophy. Special citizens' advisory committees are often appointed. Corrections are made. Public meetings are usually held to explain the budget. After final changes, the budget is presented to the voters for approval.

Reflects Quality

The school budget is an important responsibility for every member of the community. It reflects the quality of the educational program. The cost of the program should be as reasonable as possible without sacrificing quality. Much is said about false economy. This implies low cost purchases of inferior quality which may turn out to be more expensive over the longer period. It might also imply savings which limit the purposes of the program.

How can the local citizens make proper judgments concerning the school budget? They can learn a great deal by attending meetings designed to explain the thinking behind the inclusion of specific items. They can attend board of education meetings and become aware of the aims and needs of the schools. They should express their opinions during these meetings. They should feel free to ask questions which will clarify their thoughts.

The fact that a vote takes place means that a choice exists. Therefore, the community should express its opinions. Criticisms with constructive suggestions are most valuable during the planning stage. A budget which is voted down may have a destructive effect on a school system. Such a result might be avoided by having a well informed community which participates in the preparation of the budget. Naturally, each citizen has the right and duty to vote.

Question: As an older member of my community, I have no children attending the public schools. I cannot understand my responsibility for supporting the cost of these schools. Can you clarify my thinking on this matter?

Answer: Education is everybody's responsibility. Each citizen receives direct and indirect benefits. As a student you receive benefits in terms of your own growth and development. As a citizen you are benefited by the broad growth and development of society. The security of our nation is dependent upon our educational system.
