

50 Million Board Feet of Blowdown Timber Is Sold

Portland - Fifty million board feet of timber felled by the Columbus Day storm has been sold in 122 salvage sales in national forests of Oregon and Washington. A total of 135 million feet will be sold by the end of December, bringing the total number of sales to 300.

Both amounts are part of the forest service effort to salvage quickly as much as possible of the more than one billion feet of blowdown timber in the national forests of the two states.

"I'm pleased with the progress made toward the goal of salvaging this great amount of timber and repairing the damage incurred in the Oct. 12 storm," Regional Forester J. Herbert Stone said.

He pointed out that an additional volume of blowdown timber already has been removed from areas of timber sales in operation before the storm. Most forest service contracts permit adjustment by mutual agreement with the purchaser to include nominal amounts of adjacent salvage.

Completion Date Noted
The spring of 1964 is the target date for completion of the task, Stone said. If salvage is not completed by that time, entomologists estimate the Douglas-fir beetle population will increase to such proportion in the down timber that emerging adult beetles will attack healthy standing timber.

Forest service surveys of damage and steps to begin salvage operations began immediately after the Oct. 12 storm. The first salvage sale was made Oct. 18 on the Siuslaw National forest. Since then, all national forests hit by the storm have put wind-thrown timber up for sale as fast as possible, Stone said.

Several steps were taken to expedite salvage of the timber. Numerous small sales have been handled by district rangers directly with timber purchasers who were operating in areas hit by the storm. This small sale procedure has been particularly useful in opening blocked roads for crews to get into forested areas to determine extent of blowdown. At the same time the procedure permits selling the timber removed from the road, Stone noted.

Permit Time Extensions
In addition, the forest service is permitting time extensions on existing timber sale contracts upon application in order that purchasers may log blowdown timber, Stone said.

Seven and ten day advertising periods were used for salvage sales made to date. This short term advertising authority, for use under emergency conditions, permits operators to start logging 2 to 3 weeks earlier. This is particularly important in areas where winter logging is not possible.

Several temporary shifts in personnel have been made to speed the salvage job in areas of heavy blowdown. Twenty timber sale men have been assigned to the Siuslaw National forest, hardest hit by the storm. Other hard hit forests are receiving similar manpower assistance from areas of lesser damage.
