

TORRENT—The Rogue river once more became a violent spectacle as the flood-swollen stream roared its way to the sea, carrying with it chicken coops, logs and assorted debris. The angry water inundated Gold Key dam, above, as the torrent rose steadily with the heavy rainfall. The picture was taken about 4:30 p.m. yesterday, just before the river crested.

Exchange Student Tells Of Summer in Indonesia

(Editor's Note: The author of the following is a 17-year-old senior at Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass. He spent two months last summer in the island republic of Indonesia, living with an Indonesian family under American Field Service sponsorship. Admission to the program is competitive.)

Written for United Press International Relations between the young Republic of Indonesia and the United States have been improved by a high school exchange program initiated in 1956 by the American Field Service (AFS).
During a reception at the presidential palace at Bogor in 1961, President Sukarno expressed amazement at the fact that U. S. pupils had learned the Indonesian language and lived exclusively with Indonesian families during their stay in the country.
Turning to the American ambassador, Sukarno remarked that the first time he believed "there can be some anged by your hotel, is conducted in a bus which breaks down frequently. From this vintage vehicle you get sweeping views of dense, green foliaged valleys. Suddenly you found a bend and are spell-bound by the blue water of the Bali Sea, the white foam frothing on the shore, with the dimly-silhouetted mountains of Java rising in the distance.

Hindu Temple
At night, you again ride the bus, and when the road trails to dirt and mud, you walk to an ancient Hindu temple outlined in the moonlight. An almost hypnotic spell falls over the tourist as he watches a Balinese maiden descend the steps of the temple out of the mysterious darkness and bewitch the audience with brusque and weaving movements. Her eyes flash as the gamelan orchestra clangs out its weird melody.

"The tourist is told that Bali is the property of the gods, but that it is given in trust to the people. Who can doubt it after being exposed to this tropical land east of Java where mythology and ancient heroes rule the minds of a carefree island people?"

Young Signalman Now Retired From Air Lines

Ely, Nev.—UPI—When George Linnell recently gave up his daily task as signalman for United Air lines the firm gave him a cake, a party, a service pin and cited him for "capable and untiring efforts."

Mayor E. N. Broadbent of Ely shook his hand and wished him well.
All of which was more than slightly unusual because George is just 11 years old.
George's career began in 1957 when United began flying to Ely and the boy's mother took him out to see the Convoirs land. Most boys would have enjoyed this, but with George the planes took a stronger hold. He began to insist that his parents take him to Yelland field each day at 11:30 a.m. and 3 p.m., when the planes landed. This wasn't easy because the Linnell home is five miles from the field, but his parents gave in, thinking the fad soon would wear off.

Knives Missing
It didn't. Not long afterward the boy's mother Betty, noticed two of her table knives were missing. Then she saw George waving them in the air in motions which she recognized as signals used in parking aircraft.
Next time she took the boy to Yelland field he stood outside the fence and mimicked the signalman. He practiced until he was perfect, then badgered his father, Erling Linnell, into making miniature copies of regulation signal paddles. Day after day the boy stood outside the fence and waved the Convoirs to their parking places.
The pilots and ground crews noticed him and began paying attention. After developing his technique, George was allowed actually to signal parking of the aircraft. He became a favorite not only of United employees but came to know the regular passengers who traveled to and from Ely.

"In his mind it was his work," said his mother.
Through sun, wind, rain and snow George kept up his "job" for five years.
"I've even had to warm up the car and take him out when he had the sniffles," said his mother.
Finally the boy's other activities became too much and reluctantly he "retired" from United. A regulation cap and insignia for the boy's jacket long before.

appeared. Now he was given an authentic five-year service pin for his efforts.
Not wanting to let the airline down, George began training his younger brother, Ernie, 5, to take over.
But George plans a comeback, when his education is finished and he's legally old enough for a job.
"It's all he can think of," said his father, he'd just like to work up the ladder.
"I don't imagine he'll get off the ground crew," said his mother. "That's where his heart is."

Atlantic Seaboard Battered by Storm

Charleston, S.C.—UPI—A fierce Atlantic storm drifted slowly southward today and battered the Atlantic Seaboard with gale winds and high tides. No relief was in sight.
"The storm is expected to drift a little southward in the next few hours with a tendency to become stationary," the Weather Bureau said.
"Therefore no relief is in sight and residents in the affected areas can look for more of the same."
Gale warnings were displayed from Myrtle Beach, S.C., to the Virginia Capes and small craft warnings remained in effect along the coast from Cape Canaveral to Cape May, N.J.

Driving Lesson Expensive Venture

Cedar Rapids, Iowa—UPI—Edward J. Marek took his daughter, Suzanne, 16, for a driving lesson Sunday—and wished he hadn't.
She was making a left turn when the car jumped a curb, rolled across a lawn, smashed through two fences, ran over a patio, slammed into a house, plunging into the kitchen, shearing a gas line, forcing the M. E. Rowley family to flee until firemen could clear the house of gas.
Miss Marek was charged with driving without a license; her father with permitting an unauthorized person to drive.
