Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF

SHORTLY before his death, William Faulkner, one of America's greatest authors, told me that Editor Albert Erskine was the finest literary craftsman whom he ever had met. "When he approves a manuscript of mine," said Faulkner, "I know it's ready for the printer."

"Coming from you," I said, "that is a great compliment. Have you told that to Erskine?" I know how delighted he would be."

"No, I haven't," admitted Faulkner with a slow smile. "In my book, when a race horse is running good, Bennett, you don't stop him to feed him a piece of sugar!"

Two young lovers were quarreling on a bench in the park. "I hate you," said the girl. Please return my love of hair. "Done and done," snapped the boy. "Do you want the dark lock, or the one you gave me when you were a blonde?"

Another young Romeo telephoned his beloved to say, "I now own a profitable business, a new car, and a bungalow at Fire Island. How's about our getting married immediately?" "I accept," enthused the girl. "By the way, who's calling?"

One of the most intriguing court stories comes from Pennsylvania, where a lady sued a house painter for damages. She claimed that when she criticized his work, he painted her arms yellow.

Ocean Research Program Aided Through Grants

Corvallis—Grants totaling $497,000 have been received this week by the Oregon State University Department of Oceanography to help support and expand ocean research during 1963.

The studies are providing the first extensive information on the ocean off Oregon. The total OSU ocean research budget for next year will approach $1,000,000 with only seven per cent of the total coming from state funds.

The new grants include $320,000 from the Office of Naval Research and $177,000 from the National Science Foundation. A fourth of the funds will go for operation of the OSU research vessel, Aconia, which is out on fact-finding cruises every week of the year.

Oregon state is now one of America's leading institutions for oceanography research and teaching. President James H. Jensen noted in announcing the new grants. It is one of 10 universities, picked two years ago, carrying out a vast 10-year national program of research in waters surrounding the U.S.

Indispensable Tool
The $300,000 Aconia, commissioned in May 1961, is an indispensable tool in the ocean research program. Dr. Wayne V. Burt, department head, points out. With the Aconia, the OSU oceanographers are studying the ocean off Oregon from "top to bottom."

Research projects supported by the new ONR and NSF grants include work on waves, tides and currents; sediments and contours of the ocean floor; gravity and earth magnetic studies, including research on wave propagation and offshore and onshore earthquakes; ocean chemistry and marine biology.

Seventeen graduate research assistants help in the work. The OSU graduate program in oceanography is now fourth largest in the nation.

Leaders of the projects supported by the $497,000 grants include Dr. June Pattullo, Dr. John V. Byrne, and Dr. Joseph W. Berg.

COMO FOR TROOPS

New York—Singer Perry Como and a 68-member troupe left Tuesday by jet plane for Guantanamo Naval Base to entertain the troops who made up the front line in the recent crisis there.

"I'm very glad they picked us," Como said before boarding the plane at Idlewild Airport. The trip was made in response to a request from Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara.

Animals' Memory Patterns Studied

Eugene—The memory of early traumatic experiences will not be established in laboratory animals if the trauma occurs while the animals are under the influence of the tranquilizer, promazine.

However, once a painful early memory is established in an animal's mind, tranquilizers cannot eliminate the memory, but only mask it temporarily.

These are the findings of Dr. Richard A. Littman, professor of psychology at the University of Oregon, who has reported on his experiments in a recent issue of the Journal of Nervous and Mental Disease.

Co-authors of the paper are two former graduate students, Drs. Kenneth H. Brookshire and Charles N. Stewart, both now at Franklin and Marshall college.

IDENTICAL VOTES

Kansas City, Kan. — Identical twins Charles and Carl Courts were drawn for a jury panel Tuesday by Asst. County Atty. Dean Smith "struck" Charles from the panel because he said both brothers would vote the same way. The prosecutor said he knew they would vote because "I'm an identical twin myself."

Biological Sciences Study Program Reviewed During Crater High Open House

Central Point — Recently the Crater High school biology section held an open house for the school board members of District 6 and for members of Dr. Irene Hollenbeck's science methods class from Southern Oregon college.

The purpose of this open house was to describe the biological sciences curriculum study (Green Version). Crater is the only high school in this area who is participating in the new program.

BSCS was established in 1959 as an educational activity of the American Institute of Biological Science, a professional society representing 84,000 biologists. The function of the BSCS is to contribute to the improvement of biological education. BSCS headquarters are on the University of Colorado campus, Boulder.

During the evening Ogden Kellogg and Phil Sword explained the basic difference between the BSCS Biology course and conventional biology courses. The emphasis in this program is on methods of science rather than learning isolated facts. Exercises which do not have definite answers are used to encourage

School News

New testaments will be presented all fifth grade and new sixth grade students by the Gideons Tuesday, Dec. 11, at 9:40 a.m. This is an annual presentation through their efforts, to get a testament into homes of all children.

Dec. 3 to 7 has been set aside for all children to voluntarily take canned goods to the school to help needy families during the holiday season.

Basketball practice began Dec. 3. Boys of the fifth and sixth grades are participating with Jack Brown as coach. Games will not be played until after the holiday season.

Three students from the class, Randy Cavin, Jim Welch and Carol Norris, also participated in the presentation by describing their yeast populations study which is an example of typical experiment in BSCS.

Last summer Kellogg attended a two week summer session workshop at Eastern Washington State college, Cheney, Wash., in order to be qualified to teach this method in biology. He currently has one class of 21 top ability students in this experimental program while his other biology students are under the conventional program.
