Sighting of 11 Bodies Completes Lengthy Vigil

Carmichaels, Pa. - (UPI) - The last of 37 miners trapped by an explosion deep inside a giant soft coal mine five days ago were found dead Monday night.

Shortly before last midnight, an announcement was made at the head of the Frosty Mine shaft of giant Robena No. 3 mine that "11 more bodies had been sighted."

The dead count was complete - all 37 were killed by the blast.

First one, then four, then seven . . . then more, the bodies were found by rescue teams which had battled since last Thursday afternoon when word was flashed that an explosion had occurred 680 feet beneath the earth's surface.

The grief stricken families, who had kept a long and silent vigil, filed out of the small depressing waiting room near the mouth of the deep, miles-long Frosty Run shaft upon learning that none of the miners had been found alive.

There were few tears, but the wan and forlorn faces told of their emotions.

Reflects Prayerful Ordeal
Their silent grief reflected a prayerful ordeal undertaken in an uncomfortable corrugated iron building nestled in the snow-covered hills of southwestern Pennsylvania.

Despite the evidence against survival, the rescue teams worked determinedly in the miners' tradition of never giving up hope until the last missing man is found.

Only the grim task of recovering the last bodies and identifying them remained. Identification was difficult because of the condition of the bodies.

Dr. Dave Fingle, a U.S. Steel Corp. physician, and Greene County Coroner Frank J. Behm said their findings showed the cause of death of the men whose bodies were brought to the surface was the "tremendous force of the explosion."

"Death was instantaneous," the two men said.

Begin Tedious Search
In a matter of hours after the explosion, rescue teams entered the gas-filled shaft to begin the long tedious search for the trapped men.

Additional teams gathered to aid the probe under constant danger from deadly methane gas, possible roof falls and the chance of another explosion.

The 24 rescue members were aided constantly by 75 to 80 volunteers.

Hope for the survival of the 37 trapped miners dimmed steadily as the long rescue effort progressed and then ended with the sighting of the final 11 bodies.

Plan Investigation
James B. Girod, assistant superintendent of Robena No. 3, said plans for mapping a full-scale investigation to determine the cause of the blast probably would begin Wednesday. Joining in the investigation, he said, would be the U.S. Department of Mines, the Pennsylvania Department of Mines, management teams and possibly representatives from the United Mine Workers union.

The Roman Catholic primate of Hungary has been in asylum in the U. S. legation in Budapest since 1956.

He was freed from Communist imprisonment by the liberation fighters that fall but faced new persecution when the freedom revolt was crushed by Russian troops.

According to reliable sources, Hungarian diplomats here were sounding out the United States on a deal. They would give Mindszenty safe conduct out of the country and free the remaining political prisoners seized in the 1956 uprising, if the United States will not press a vote on an item renewing the UN condemnation of the revolt's suppression.

WHERE ARE THEY? - After leaving their cars on a parking lot all day, workers in South Bend, Ind., found them all but covered up when they came off their jobs Monday. A steady snowfall deposited 20 inches on the city with drifts three to four feet deep. Many roads in the county were closed by drifts but city streets were open but slick. (UPI)

Railroad Scores in Dispute Over Jobs

Washington - (UPI) - Railroad management won a further round Monday in its effort to eliminate jobs it says are no longer needed.

The New York Central Railroad, the nation's second largest, and the Order of Railroad Telegraphers reached agreement in their five-year old job security dispute after two months of steady negotiations with federal mediator Francis A. O'Neill.

The railroad will have the right to lay off telegraphers on 90 day notice subject to substantial severance pay.

ORT President G. E. Leighty and NYC Vice President L. B. Fee said in announcing the agreement that it follows closely the settlement reached under arbitration in September between the ORT and the Chicago Northwestern Railway.

The ORT has now reached agreement with three railroads but still has to settle with 27 others regarding its 1958 request for a rule in which no job would be eliminated without union approval. But it was clear that the C&N.W. settlement, reached after a 30 day strike, had been established as a pattern for future settlements.

The agreement with NYC, Leighty said, was reached without "threat or force" and he considered it an "acceptable, fair and equitable" settlement. Under the agreement telegraphers laid off will get severance pay ranging from $800 to close to $10,000 with most experienced workers receiving about $7,000.
