

Christmas Cookies

First Congregational church held the annual Christmas workshop last Sunday at the YMCA and the cookie corner for kiddies resulted in the most concentrated effort of the afternoon. Little Norma McLean, daughter of the T. R. McLeans, carefully placed little candy beads on her gingerbread man one by one while Douglas McGeary mastered the mechanics of a pastry tube filled with frosting. Douglas is a son of Dr. and Mrs. Donald McGeary, Phoenix.

Lura Lee chose a star-shaped cookie and slathered it thickly with frosting. The cookies had been made in advance by the mothers. Lura's parents are Mr. and Mrs. Donald L. Lee.

Little cooks, and big ones, too, know that the easiest way to clean a knife covered in frosting is with the tongue, and this was the method used by Molly Richardson, daughter of the Duane Richardsons. Small Ann Watson, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. John Watson, was also one of the cookie crew.

Bright-eyed Valerie Bohnert (at left) helpfully displayed a finished masterpiece at the request of Photographer Robert Vroman. Valerie is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Don Bohnert, Central Point.

Jimmy Watson didn't bother with the fancy stuff—he just stuck two cookies together with a generous application of frosting and headed it straight for his mouth. Jimmy's parents are Dr. and Mrs. John Watson.

Small Holly Henselman covered face and hands rather than cookies with her allotment of frosting, and then watched her big brother Steve who was more serious in his decorating efforts. They are children of Mr. and Mrs. Richard L. Henselman.

In a pensive mood, Douglas McGeary (below) stuffed a final cookie in his mouth and was ready for the songs and devotions which ended the afternoon.
