There was great excitement in the children's department at Sacred Heart hospital yesterday when Santa Claus (Dick Chamberlain of Eagle Point) visited the small patients. Santa is shown here with Sammy Dykes, six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Dykes, 2412 Spring street, who suffered burns recently when he set his clothing on fire with a match. Santa cheered Sammy up by telling him that maybe he might be able to spend part of the holiday at home, and then return to the hospital. Santa's visit to Sacred Heart was arranged by Beta Nu chapter of Epsilon Sigma Alpha sorority, as part of their "Have Santa-Will Visit" project and families in the Eagle Point, White City and Shady Cove areas wishing to have the jolly man call on their children may telephone the Chamberlain home, 446-3061, tonight.

Fine Meal, Fine Wine Said 'Tranquilizing'

By GAY PAULEY
UPI Women's Editor

New York—Eating from compulsion is one thing. But dining for the pleasure that good food and beverage bring is one man's best tranquilizers. So says a young New York physician who is head of an organization of physicians "dedicated to the study and enjoyment of wine and food."

Dr. Herbert Gould, 33, is self-styled "president, organizer, and instigator" of the Physicians' Wine Appreciation Society, with chapters in New York, Boston and Miami.

We asked Dr. Gould how doctors defended this outside-the-office interest in eating and drinking, in an era when physicians are cautioning all against overweight.

No Defense

"I don't think we have to be defended," said Gould, an ophthalmologist. "People become overweight because they eat from compulsion. Some people eat from compulsion. We eat for pleasure. This is verging on the arts. I think we need to transport ourselves occasionally to a more gracious age. A fine meal with fine wine is one of the most tranquilizing of occasions."

"An intermittent feast never hurt anybody. But this is like anything else, always in moderation. I weigh 175 pounds. That's what I also weighed when I got out of high school. A wonderful meal doesn't have to be loaded with calories."

The PWAS was founded in New York in the early fall of 1961 when Dr. Gould, who had traveled overseas with the military, got together with nine other physicians similarly interested in study and enjoyment of wine and food.

"Each of us was to proselytize another 10 doctors," he laughed. "At the first meeting, a champagne tasting, we had 100."

Today, the New York society has 200 physician members, Boston and Miami, 100 each, he said.

The New York group, which Gould said represents "the whole cross-section of medicine and all age groups, holds a monthly wine tasting. Importers furnish them the beverage; a small fee for membership covers cost of hotel or restaurant facilities. Then, there's a monthly dinner, sometimes stag, sometimes with the wives invited.

Dr. Gould said a "burgundy tasting" is scheduled for January. There will be a Chinese New Year dinner with Chinese foods of course, and in May, a visit to the cognac and champagne country of France.

About 30 members of the group will be guests of the
