

Protocol in Inaugural Will Take Slight Shift

Salem—The protocol in the inaugural ceremonies here Monday will take a slight shift from previous years.

The superintendent of public instruction, who until 1961 was a statewide elected official, no longer will be in the professional.

His position will be taken by Tax Court Judge Peter Gunnar, who is a statewide elected official.

The soloist for the program will be Edith Fairham Gunnar, the judge's wife, who sang at Governor and Mrs. Hatfield's wedding four years ago.

And what a forthcoming whirl for Mrs. Hatfield in a four day period she entertains the entire legislature at the Hatfield home, takes in the inaugural affairs, begins her weekly "At Homes" for the public, and observes another birthday—her 34th.

The governor won't be using a teleprompter on his expected 45-minute inaugural address. He used one last time and it stopped in mid-speech. He had backstopped himself with a typed manuscript and was able to go on without interruption.

There are but four living former governors for this inaugural day, two fewer than were listed on the 1959 program. O. S. West and A. W. Norblad having died in the meantime. Of the four, only one, Charles A. Sprague, served out a full four-year term and each became an "ex" through the ballot box rather than through retirement of constitutional limitation. All are expected to attend Monday's inaugural ceremonies.

Chief Justice William M. McAllister, a former speaker of the house, will be swearing in Hatfield for the third time. He did the honors for Hatfield as secretary of state and last time as governor. McAllister won't get to see a former law associate, Robert Du n e n, born in as a congressman in the nation's capital, however.

In his farewell remarks at the swearing in of his successor, Justice Harold Warner observed that when he came on the high court the average age was 64 and today it is 55. Justice George Rossman, in his 70s, is the senior member of the court, and Justice A. T. Goodwin, not yet 40, is the youngest.

Former Justice James T. Brand, who left the court to teach in Florida and has since returned to Oregon, says he is busier now than for the past several years with service as a hearings officer in the public utility commission, writing a newspaper column, and practicing law with his son.

Seating space, as always, will be at a premium for the inauguration. The new filing cabinets which came in four years ago reduced the number of seats on the north and south aisles.

However this inauguration will probably be seen by more people than any in Oregon history, thanks to television. Not only are there more stations in Oregon, but ambitious coverage plans call for 12 cameras in the house chambers Monday when the gavel opens the 52nd legislative assembly.

To accommodate the planned live television coverage, the house will be sworn in at 10 a.m. and the senate at 10:15 a.m.

Hatfield Monday witnessed the swearing in of a supreme court justice, a Multnomah circuit judge and a Multnomah district judge. He had started them all on their judicial careers.

The three were Arno H. Denecke, a Hatfield appointee to the circuit court in 1959 who subsequently won election to the state's highest bench, Charles Crookham and William C. Beers.

As Hatfield ends his first term in office he can look back on what may be a record of judicial appointments for an Oregon chief executive—a supreme court justice (A. T. Goodwin), a newly created tax court judge (Peter Gunnar), 18 circuit court judges, 13 district judges, 4 county judges, 28 justices of the peace and 12 district attorneys.

Mongrel Waits for Master With 'Faith That Endures'

For 11 glorious and joyful years they walked together, man and mongrel.

For all those years they were inseparable. The dog had come under the man's care in a weak and sickly condition when only 10-days-old. Feeding with a rich formula from a bottle and 24-hour-care restored the pup's health. He grew and became a constant and devoted companion.

The years slipped by the summer and a handyman during the winter, sought escape from worldly problems in the bottle that is supposed to cheer. He drank heavily.

One night, in a drunken state, he slipped and fell into a deep canal. His body was found next morning in shallow water near the edge, face down. The dog - its ears down, its eyes sad and badly frightened - was beside the body. Evidence was plentiful that the dog had pulled the man up to the bank.

Crowd Gathers

The crowd gathered... the bereaved, the morbid, the curious. No one paid any attention to the saddest one there, the little mongrel dog who for 11 years had been the man's sole companion. No one noticed him sinking at the edge of the crowd. Not understanding what had happened, the dog was nevertheless conscious of a great loneliness.

Neither did anyone recall seeing the dog at the funeral or at the cemetery when the master's body was laid to rest in a tomb. The dead man's mother found the dog a few days later, but for many days he refused to eat. For hours at a time he laid flat on the floor, head between his paws, eyes wide open in silent bereavement.

The death and funeral happened three years ago. The little mongrel dog is 14-years-old now, extreme age for one of his kind.

But he is still faithful. Every day, rain or shine, he trots to the cemetery to sit for an hour on the tomb, sad and very much alone.

Presence Accepted

His daily presence is tolerated now by the sexton. All previous efforts to keep the dog away met with failure. In spite of harsh commands, profane language and hurled stones, the mongrel dog, steadfast in his loyalty and devotion, continued his daily visits.

Our admiration is usually boundless for those who remain loyal to another person, cause or principle over long periods of time. Much favorable comment has been voiced about "faith that endures."

It is an admirable trait, and not always associated just with humankind. Some of the so-called lower animals display it, too, for this little mongrel dog remains faithful. He waits, wanting desperately to hear the beloved voice that has been so still for three long years. He longs to be patted again on the head by a hand he does not know will never pat him again. Never again will he accompany his beloved master on daily walks in the woodland or along the canal.

Pathetic that the little dog cannot be told the master he loves will never return. In the meantime we console ourselves that time heals all things if we have "enduring faith."
