Publish a Newspaper!

By Garna Silke

At your next party it would be fun for you and your friends to publish a make-believe newspaper. Take two big sheets and cut one into strips and squares that would be large enough to contain articles and cartoons and advertisements. To start the game, announce, as you hand out pencils and the strips and squares, that the players are to get out the evening paper in 15 minutes. Those who get the squares should do local ads and cartoons; those with the strips are to write on such topics as "Do I Like Homework?"; "Should We Chew Bubble Gum-in Public?"; "How's Our Team Doing?" One should be assigned a Gossip Column and another Fashion Notes. When the time is up, the various items are pasted on the uncut sheet and read out loud. You should have many laughs.

Benjamin Franklin

By Ragna Eskil

Benjamin Franklin was born on January 16, 1706. He was not only a great statesman, but he is also known as the Father of Electricity. Did you know that his son Billy was with him during the lightning storm when, using a kite and key, he made the discovery that lightning is electricity? And did you know that he invented the lightning rod that we use today and that he organized the first fire-engine company and started the first circulating library in this country?

He is famous, too, for his common sense and witty sayings, which he published in his "Poor Richard's Almanac." Some of these are: God helps them that help themselves; little strokes fell great oaks; the cat in gloves catches no mice; it is hard for an empty sack to stand upright. Do you know any others?

Let's Draw a Leopard

By Ann Davidow

Draw a long and lanky beast.

Pepper him with dots.

And that's the very simple way
Our leopard gets his spots.
