Plant to Produce Sulphuric Acid Is Still Possibility

The establishment of a sulphuric acid plant, as recommended by the Oregon Department of Planning and Development, is still within the realm of possibility.

This announcement came out of the meeting at Cave Junction Sunday to compile information concerning sulphides and minerals in the four counties designated by the Chrome Producers association as a depressed area.

The executive committee, appointed in the hope that findings would lead to a government expenditure of $10,000 for an exploratory survey, received reports of sulphide deposits, which Bruce Manley, Medford attorney, member of the committee and Chrome Producers' association lawyer, described as "very gratifying."

To Extend Time The committee decided to extend the time for receiving reports, Manley said.

One of the most encouraging reports came from H. B. Chesser of the Siskion corporation, Reno, Nev., Manley said. Chesser told the committee he had a million tons of copper and iron sulphate ore which averages 3 per cent copper. It is located in the Gray Eagle mine about 18 miles north-west of Happy Camp, Calif.

It is high in sulphur content. Reports of other properties are coming in every day, Manley said, so the committee decided that an extension of time would be beneficial.

Price Is Better The price of sulphuric acid is "a better business index than the price of steel," proponents of the study aimed toward establishment of the $3.5 million sulphide refinery and smelter stated.

Development of minerals was cited as the only financial hope of the area. Sulphuric acid is the most widely used in this area by the wood industries and the paper industry. In other parts of Oregon it is used by the paper industry, which has in recent years turned to chlorine dioxide for the bleaching of pulp. This can be prepared at the paper mill by adding sulphuric acid to a solution of sodium chlorate which has been treated with air and sulphur dioxide.

In Great Demand Sulphuric acid also is in great demand for fertilizers and for batteries, in paint and pigments, iron and steel and rayon, the committee pointed out. The proportionate uses of the product has not changed appreciably over a 10-year period, according to the report of the Oregon Department of Planning and Development, which made a survey of the potential market for sulphuric acid in Oregon. No specific location for the sulphuric acid plant was recommended by the department.

It is understood if it is established, that it will be located in the part of the area adjacent to the richest deposits.

Youth Adventures Director Speaks At Rotary Lunch

There's no finer way to communicate with delinquent youngsters than to take them on a good camping trip, according to Howard Busse, director of Youth Adventures Inc., who spoke here Tuesday at the Rogue Valley Country club.

Speaking before the Medford Rotary club, Busse, whose headquarters are in Portland, described the unique program of Youth Adventures in conducting trips into the wilds of northern Oregon for boys and girls at MacLaren and Hillcrest schools.

It behooves the people of Oregon to take every measure possible to rehabilitate these delinquent youngsters, not simply because of the human factor but also because of the economic burden to the state, he said.

It takes from $400 to $500 per month of tax money for each one of the boys and girls at MacLaren and Hillcrest. This is quite a tax load because MacLaren's population is near the 500 boy mark and Hillcrest approximately 200 girls, Busse pointed out.

Delinquency is like the weather. Everyone talks about it but few people do anything about it, the speaker said. Youth Adventures Inc. is doing something about it. With the aid of contributions, the support of volunteer workers and the cooperation of the forest service, a three-unit camp is being established for the youth camping program. The first unit is in the form of a prairie schooner housing facilities, the second an Indian village and the third a frontier fort, he said.

The state provides only transportation; the rest of the program is financed and conducted through Youth Adventures, Inc. Further monthly programs are conducted at MacLaren and Hillcrest by the organization.

Awards Banquet Set By Ashland Groups

Ashland—The annual awards banquet sponsored by the Ashland Chamber of Commerce will be at 7 p.m. Feb. 7 in the Mark Antony hotel.

Following the dinner, three outstanding citizens will be named for their civic contributions. Nominations have been made by local clubs and final choice is in the hands of three judges.

Guest speaker will be Glenn Jackson, Medford, chairman of the state highway commission. The Populaires, a singing group from Southern Oregon college, will provide entertainment.

Ashland service clubs unite each year in honoring the outstanding Senior Citizen (man or woman), the Man of the Year (age 36 to 59) and the Junior Man of the Year (under 36). The Senior Citizen award is given by the Kiwanis club; the Man of the Year award is sponsored by the chamber of commerce, the Junior Citizen award is by the Jaycees.

The public is invited to take part in the annual awards dinner.

SOC Professor Speaks At Engineers' Meeting

"The safety and security of the United States in the 1980's will rest on the young men being trained in our colleges and universities today," the Rogue Valley Section of Professional Engineers of Oregon was told this week by Professor Vaughn D. Borne, Southern Oregon college, Ashland, guest speaker.

Our safety in the 1980's depends, he said, on engineers, scientists, and specialists trained in the late 1920's and the depression years. It is too late now to do anything about the quality of education they received then, and we "can only hope that as students of fundamentals in their disciplines in those years, they learned their lessons well."

The new chairman of the Division of Social Studies at Southern Oregon college spoke on "Some New Patterns in American Security Research," referring to new developments since World War II.

"The new patterns of our day will be old patterns in the 1980's, tired and institutionalized. Our educators will have to give would-be engineers and scientists training of great breadth if they are to show the ingenuity that the future will demand of them," he said.

National security research is being carried forward at the present time, Dr. Borne said, in universities, industrial laboratories, government installations, and non-profit corporations.

Scientific research in the United States has been revolutionized in the years since World War II. Mathematics has become perhaps the most important single subject with relation to the national defense. There is a new climate favorable to research in high places in the government.

Humorist Speaks At Knife, Fork

"You do what you think is important," Robert Ringer, humorist and former sales consultant, told members of the Rogue River Valley Knife and Fork club Tuesday night at the Rogue Valley Country club.

It is not the size of your ability that counts," Ringer added, "but the size of your dream."

The speaker, who in 1961 was honored as the salesman of the year in California, continued that if a person's dream is big enough it cannot be accomplished alone, so other persons must help.

Ringer stressed that to get others to help a person along toward his dream the person must have "sincere appreciation" for what he does.

He gave the formula of success as 95 per cent mental and 5 per cent know all, stressing that the size of the dream determines how far an individual will go.
