Women of Unity Hear Program on Art Forms

"General Art" was the subject chosen by Mrs. Ben Trowbridge Jr., who was guest speaker for Women of Unity last Friday at the Unity church of Medford.

Mrs. Trowbridge was formerly an arts and crafts teacher at Hedrick Junior High school and is a member of the Rogue Valley Art association.

She divided general art in two classes, fine arts, under which are painting, architecture, and sculpture; and commercial art, which includes design, color, and organization.

She spoke of painting under fine arts, being representational, which truly represents the picture and is pictorially exacting.

Abstract art deals with the character of what the artist is painting, she explained. "Modern art" is a term often misused as referring to abstract art, the speaker said. It is not modern, and is found more in history than any other art, she added. She described the Egyptian style, Greek style, and early Christian.

Urges Open Mind
In non-representational art there are no recognizable forms, Mrs. Trowbridge said. "You are the viewer, participant and interpreter," she said, and cautioned people to approach this form of art with an open mind, and make an effort to see the warmth in each picture.

A city council report was given by Mrs. Jack Wheeler with a reminder that tickets are available for the Valentine's ball to be held February 9 at Rogue Valley County fair club. Mrs. White, 1963 Valentine girl for the chapter, will participate in the coronation ceremonies.

Progress reports were given on the style and variety show the chapter is sponsoring March 30 at the Phoenix Community club.

Mrs. Darrol Hughes was co-hostess for the evening.

A recent event of the chapter was a tour of Dumas Domestic Laundry. Luncheon followed at Denney's.

"We live with commercial art from morning until night," the speaker states. "It deals with everything from the clothes we wear, to the houses we live in." New Ideas Are Noted For Suits

Paris—Pierre Balmain, whose clothes would make almost any woman look like a lady, hiked up the waistline and widened shoulders in his spring styles today.

Balmain, 46, a polo player and student of architecture before he took up designing, makes clothes so elegant and expensive that women plan to hold onto them for years.

Therefore changes in style at his salon near the George V Hotel are slow and easy. His skirts still just barely cover the knee in his spring collection, his shoulder is wider, but round and soft through cut, not from padding.

This shoulder was noticeable, to the chattering fashion reporters, and Balmain friends at the showing when, for example, a model paraded in a brown-and-white tweed straight coat, casually swung over a white jersey sleeveless sheath dress, its top slightly bunched.

Balmain also firmly belted his spring clothes. But while avant garde designer Pierre Cardin boldly belted suit jackets, Balmain's belts discreetly were hidden. His straight suit skirts, not the jackets, had belts, of the suit fabric or of leather. This eliminated that half-finished look that keeps some women from taking off a suit jacket.

Balmain's suit blouses therefore were tucked inside the skirts, and usually sleeveless with soft long bows at the neck. Unlike other Paris designers, Balmain's jacket linings did not match his blouses of printed silk and chiffon.

His suit jackets, ending just below the waistline, were loose at the waist and had medium-sized collars and small lapels. Each suit jacket had a large button or bow fastening right below the bustline for a high-waisted effect.

The crowd admired his color combinations, such as a turquoise heavy silk suit with an olive green sleeveless linen blouse trimmed with turquoise.

A nursery is provided at Westminster Presbyterian church, 2000 Oakwood drive. Reservations should be phoned to Mrs. T. F. Martin, 772-8230, no later than January 30. All women in the valley are invited to attend.

Secrets of Sewing With Plaids Told In OSU Bulletin

Corvallis—Perfectly matched plaids can make a 39 cent-a-yard gingham dress look expensive, while improperly joined plaids can ruin the effect of the most expensive fabric.

Secrets of sewing with plaids are told in a new, illustrated bulletin available from Oregon State University extension service.

Size of the plaid makes a difference in the pattern the home seamstress should choose. For example, a large plaid looks best when a pattern with few seams is used. The garment will be easier to cut and sew, and will take less material. Patterns with yokes and more seams, on the other hand, can be used for small plaids.

The two types of plaids - even and uneven - present different problems. The bulletin explains how to tell the types apart and pictures specific ways to work with each.

Among general suggestions listed for cutting plaid fabrics are: Center a vertical plaid line at the body center. Place pattern pieces so one main horizontal block of plaid is at, or near, the shoulder. Match front and back along horizontal lines of plaid.

If blouse has an underarm dart, match plaid above the dart. This makes it possible when cutting set-in sleeves to have the horizontal lines continuous around the body.

To piece a plaid, match and join along one line of a design and not through the middle of a color.

Oregon residents may obtain free copies of the bulletin "Planning Plaids" from county extension offices or from OSU bulletin clerk, Corvallis.
