Animals with Highest IQs Don't Socialize with Humans
Any animal we personally dislike, we consider stupid, dumb and ignorant. If we dislike cats, we say they are about as dumb as any creature. If we have a fondness for dogs we give that animal the benefit of the doubt and figure our family pet is pretty smart.

The love and belief in the dog's intelligence is understandable, for a dog has usually been a part of just about everyone's household some time or other. We also feel that a dog's close and rather intimate association with mankind, over so many years of time, would naturally instill in the animal some of our own intelligence. We feel a great deal of our knowledge must have rubbed off on our four-footed friend.

This human ego, in the light of scientific experiment, has not borne out our ideas, not at least to our satisfaction. Even if our dog "can do everything but talk," he does rate somewhat lower in IQ than many of the other species of animals. For some peculiar reason the animals with the highest IQ rating are those that have had little or no direct contact with the human race. This sort of dampens our ego. At least it should.

More Sense?
Ever since man himself reached a stage in his development where he had the intelligence to think and to reason, he has pondered the possibility that the so-called lower animals just might have more "sense" than they are credited with having. Unlike man, animals cannot read, write or build a schoolhouse, but they can do so many things that help them to survive.

With this in mind, science has looked with interest at some of our animal friends and has come up with some startling facts. Science agrees with what most of us believed at the time that the dog, sheep and even the horse are pretty low in animal intelligence.

We have coined expressions to indicate some animal's stupidity. We say, silly as a pig, dumb as a monkey and crazy like a fox. We might be surprised to find the fox, a close relative of the family dog, is no whit dumber in the field of the intellect. We admit, too, that the shark that lives in the sea is about as stupid as they come.

Line Pretty Dim
An animal's IQ rating is established by the method it can reason out a problem for itself, how long it takes to reach a conclusion and what it has learned by the experience. What the animal has been taught by constant repetition may be an ability to retain knowledge, but is not an indication of how much the animal knows. The line between intellect and instinct is pretty dim and may even overlap, even the most expert human cannot be sure whether or not the animal is really trying.

The old familiar chimp holds a place pretty high on the scale and alongside him, and maybe a little ahead, is a newcomer to the college, the gorilla. He's about as smart as they come and much more intelligent than most humans would admit. In fact, there are those among us a little jealous of the animal's intelligence. This character deserves a diploma.

Don't get the idea that just human being have all the intelligence. If you think you are in for a shock one of these days, because open-minded, unbiased observers can knock human conceit on its point into the well-known cocked hat.

Blind Woman Is Ardent Bowler
Tulsa, Okla.—(AP)—A grandmother, 82, who has never seen the interior of a bowling alley and never will — has hopes of raising her 45-pin bowling average and breaking 100.

Mrs. Thomas J. Barkley recently won a runner-up trophy in an Oklahoma City tournament despite a handicap. She is blind.

The silver-haired Mrs. Barkley, sightless since an operation three years ago, had never been inside a bowling alley until last summer. A friend encouraged her to take up the popular pastime.

Mrs. Barkley visited a Tulsa community center and became acquainted with several other handicapped persons. Soon, she was working in ceramics and bowling with the others.

The bowlers formed a team and began bowling each Tuesday afternoon. A Tulsa soft-drink company furnished the keggers with shirts.

In late October, the Tulsans traveled to Oklahoma City to take on a team of handicapped bowlers there. Mrs. Barkley averaged 69 pins a game and won the second-place trophy.

"We're just like one big happy family," she said of her bowling friends.

"I once had a 98 game. I think I can hit 100 someday," Mrs. Barkley swears. "I'm not about to slow down. I celebrate her 60th wedding anniversary recently. Her husband doesn't bowl. He's almost a 'bowling widower.'"

Mrs. Barkley said she's turned over the kitchen chores to her 86-year-old husband, although she still does most of the housework.

The active Tulsan may be getting a little older, but she's not about to slow down. "Rocking chairs are for presidents and old people," she said, as she prepared to bowl another time.
