A Novel Experience Audition for House Reading Clerk Provides West With Something To Do

By DICK WEST Washington — If you look hard enough you can almost always find something new to do in Washington. This week, for instance, I attended a reading clerk audition. Actually, I didn't have to look very hard because the audition was held in the chamber of the House of Representatives just down the corridor from my regular hangout.

Nevertheless, it was for me a novel experience, although I wouldn't recommend it for steady entertainment. The reading clerk job became vacant last year with the untimely death of the veteran George Maurer, who was widely regarded as one of the best reading clerks the House has ever had.

In hiring a new reading clerk, House officials do not rely entirely on patronage considerations as they might in hiring, say, a bill clerk, an enrolling clerk, a file clerk, a journal clerk or a tally clerk. This is because a reading clerk must have rather special talents, not the least of which is the ability to pronounce correctly the names of all 435 members of the House.

When you consider that some congressmen have difficulty pronouncing their own names, then you begin to have an inkling of the magnitude of the job. Not only must the reading clerk be able to pronounce the names, he also must be able to recognize the faces of the House members. This requires a strong stomach as well as a good memory.

Furthermore, he must be able to talk louder than the 435 House members, both individually and collectively. In other words, he must make himself heard over a babble of voices, the volume of which can exceed that of the sound track of "Ben Hur" during the chariot race.

More important yet, he must master the art of half-talk, which sets him apart from the congressmen themselves, whose second language is double-talk. Half-talk is the ability to skip over at least half of the words in a long bill, message or amendment and still give the impression of reading with continuity.

Since a proper voice is so essential, the 23 applicants for the reading clerk job were given an audition, like actors, auctioneers and hog callers.

BOX SOCIAL Talent — The Talent Methodist youth are sponsoring an old-fashioned box social Saturday, Feb. 2, at 3:30 p.m. in the church annex. Girls are to take a box lunch for two and the boys will bid on the boxes. Auctioneers will be Jim Rutherford and George Moore.

WILD FLOWER SLIDES O'Brien-Missionary Volunteer society of the Seventh-day Adventist church will meet tonight at the church in Cave Junction at 7:30 o'clock. The program will follow a nature theme with Mrs. Harold James showing colored slides on wild flowers. Music will be presented by Danny Mellish.
