Flemming Survives Questions With Integrity Unchallenged

By A. ROBERT SMITH, Mail Tribune Washington Bureau

Washington (Special) - Arthur S. Flemming has survived three days of thorough questioning by the Senate stockpile investigations subcommittee, perhaps with his reputation for being a demanding administrator a trifle blemished but his integrity unchallenged.

The president of the University of Oregon was a model of self-disciplined equanimity as he withstood hour after hour of questions about the decisions he had made as President Eisenhower's defense mobilizer which resulted in a massive government stockpile of commodities which cost the taxpayers several billions and, in some instances, proved profitable to a number of private concerns.

At no point in the investigation was there any suggestion of corruption in the classic sense: a government official rendering decisions in cahoots with a private interest for mutual gain.

But throughout the line of questioning there was an effort on the part of Sen. Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) and his chief counsel, R. C. Coburn, to show that the Eisenhower Administration was too solicitous of the demands made by private interests who gained by Flemming's decisions respecting government buying of chromite, lead, zinc and copper.

Flemming handled all such cross-examination with a standard disclaimer of any primary intent to aid an industry. Always, he said, he acted in harmony with the president's policies, which were to safeguard the national security through acquisition of critical materials as a hedge against the possibility of another war.

When Symington reminded him that previous witnesses had testified that they felt under political pressure at times to recommend certain purchase programs, such as extension of chromite buying in southern Oregon as urged by the late Douglas McKay during his 1956 senatorial campaign, Flemming repeatedly responded with open-faced innocence of any such pressures.

Flemming, in a word, was a Christian gentleman who saw no evil, heard no evil and now would speak evil of no one.

He even spoke well of his inquisitors. "Mr. Coburn is very fair," he said after the second day. "I have a real regard for Sen. Symington."

Exhorting great self-restraint, Flemming was magnanimous throughout the hearings to avoid arousing Symington's temper, which exploded sensationally last summer when former Treasury Secretary George Humphrey appeared before the committee.

If the noted educator failed to impress his investigators with his modus operandi among the great titans of the business world, Flemming left a lasting impression that only the best intentions motivated his execution of the stockpile program.

The Symington subcommittee now retires to draft its findings, and its recommendations for disposal of surplus materials.

It seems likely to score the effect of some of Flemming's decisions and to contend that a national security program was used to aid certain industries and the economy of certain areas, such as mining sections. But it is not likely to mention that many members of Congress representing these interests were also urging Flemming to do substantially what he did.

Fryer District Water Users Elect Directors

Eagle Point - New directors were elected for the Fryer District Improvement Irrigation district at a meeting held in the city library here last week.

The meeting, originally scheduled to start at 8 p.m., was delayed an hour while telephone calls were made to water users in order to get a sufficient number present for a quorum.

Willard Cave was elected president of the board of directors with Burse Cathy, Victor Hay, Jim Leeuwenburgh and Mrs. Betty Claus as directors.

In other action expressed by the board the residents living on the west side of Little Butte creek will have an additional $4 increase in their assessments over last year to pay for the 400 feet of tile that was laid from the Main st. bridge past the Eagle Market to replace the open ditch.

As soon as the ditch is tiled the assessments will probably hit an all time low as there will be little need for funds to maintain that section of the ditch, according to the former district secretary.

Fill dirt is needed to fill around the tile and the company would appreciate obtaining all dirt that is available. Rick Wolgamott resigned as secretary-treasurer of the district with a new appointment to be made by the board of directors. No decision was reached as to the action needed to put the east side of the district into better condition service wise. The board of directors agreed to look over the pump and give the entire system serious consideration.
