Allimeter Possible Cause of Crash

Ocala, Fla.—(UPI)—Authorities said Monday a faulty altimeter may have caused the crash of a private plane in which a socialite artist, Mrs. Patricia Widener, and her personal pilot were killed.

There was speculation the device, which measures altitude, possibly misled pilot Robert G. Staab, 40, into flying closer to the ground than he realized.

The twin-engine Aero Commander crashed about 15 miles southeast of here during a rainstorm Sunday night. It appeared to have snagged a high tree sticking out of dense scrub underbrush and slammed into the ground only eight miles from the airport where it was to land.

The bodies of Mrs. Widener, 35, some of whose paintings are in the collection of the Duke and Duchess of Windsor, and Staab were found late Monday afternoon. Both had been thrown clear of the plane, which apparently burned after it crashed.

PSC Tells of Early Admission Plans

Portland—Portland State college is continuing its early-admission plan for Oregon high school seniors with grade averages of 2.5 or better.

Seniors may now apply to Portland State for fall term admission before they graduate in June, according to Robert Taylor, assistant registrar. Students whose high school grades are not high enough to qualify for early admission, but who plan to attend Portland State, can also apply for admission before graduation. Official admission, however, will be delayed until the high school graduation record is received, he said.

Information Sought By Missouri Man

A letter requesting information about the burial place of a relative was received in the Medford mayor's office yesterday from a man in Braymer, Mo.

Herbert W. Wooden said in his letter he was interested in learning where Hiram Woodman, who came to Oregon with his brother, Isaac, in 1830, was buried.

Isaac settled near Mitchell, Ore., the letter said, but where Hiram lived is not known. A daughter of Hiram's, Mrs. Martin Tucker, is believed to have lived in Medford during 1936.

Wooden asked anyone with information about his relative to write him in Braymer, Mo.

Donkey Installed On Hatfield's Desk

Salem—(UPI)—Senate President Ben M. Mousa moved into the governor's office Monday and promptly installed a ceramic donkey on the gubernatorial desk.

The donkey seemed unconcerned as it stood guard over two carved wooden elephant bookends on the desk. Mousa, a Democrat from The Dalles, becomes governor whenever Gov. Mark Hatfield leaves the state.

Hatfield left Oregon early Sunday to fly to Washington, D.C. It marked the first time Mousa had served as governor.

Mousa will again take over as governor for a few days next week when Hatfield goes to California to address the Lincoln Club of Los Angeles on Feb. 12.

Try and Stop Me

By BENNETT CERF A CONFIRMED diner-out in Manhattan has one conversational gambit that usually stops a new dinner partner cold at some stage in the proceedings. He turns a pair of innocent blue eyes on the lady and says, "I wonder if you know how to take blood stains out of a buffalo robe?" Most partners register amusement at his off-beat approach, but one pert miss last week crossed him up. Her comment was, "You clumsy oaf! How on earth did you get blood stains on your buffalo robe?"

A Harvard professor once delivered a spirited lecture in Tennessee on the Medes and the Persians. At its conclusion a stout lady bustled up to the platform, wrung his hand warmly and told him, "You talk was particularly interestin' to me, Professor. You see, mah mother was a Meade."

A movie starlet, better known for her extra-curricular activities than any talent on the screen, wriggled into a Beverly Hills bistro with a big black eye. "An obvious fake," sneered one of her bitter rivals. "She just wants people to think she said 'no' once, anyhow!"

"When a husband opens the door and helps his wife into the car," reflects that old cynic, Tony Randall, "he probably has just required one or the other."

In the Day's News

By FRANK JENKINS There was a time in the world when persistently spending more than you took in was regarded as a one-way road to the poorhouse. In those benighted days, there were few dissenters to that doctrine. But the world is changing. The modern theory seems to be that the bigger the deficit the greater the prosperity.

Personally, I can't go along with that theory. It doesn't seem to make sense. But it is obviously popular. The election returns seem to prove that. What's wrong with me? Am I ALONE in a world that has gone far beyond me?

Doesn't ANYBODY believe in thrift any more? IT'S rough to be alone in the world. I was getting low in my mind. But, just as I was about ready to go out and jump in the lake, the mail arrived. It brought me a letter from Dan Crawford, of Tulelake. He and I apparently see things pretty much alike. So I think I'll let him write this column today. He says:

"Fact 4. If we reduce government income and increase government expense, with a beneficial result to our nation and our economy, there follows one inescapable conclusion—the national debt is of NO significance to our economy or our society. It simply does not exist as a problem or a factor to be considered by the U.S. in relation to itself or to the world.

"The fact that the President's proposal was not instantly laughed out of existence proves I am crazy. If this complete departure from the basic philosophy of what we know as the liberal and conservative concept of government can be taken seriously, then every economic principle I believe in is dead wrong.

"In my demented condition I was always able to rationalize the arguments for deficit spending expounded by the liberal elements of our country. Balancing material advantages to offset the evil of a huge national debt was an opinion that, while not shared, seemed a possible solution as long as our tremendous national resources held out. But this refusal to acknowledge the fact that a national debt exists as a factor in the economy is in direct violation of my most fundamental thought patterns.

"One of us is nuts, and since it can't be the President, come and get ME."

MOVE over, Dan. I reckon you and I are irrevocably cast to be room mates in some plus federally supported booby-hatch in the not too distant future. It's high time for us to be getting even better acquainted than we are now and have been in the past.

Youngster Chokes To Death on Peanut El Centro, Calif.—(UPI)—A 21-month-old boy choked off a peanut Monday night and died several moments later.

Mrs. Maria Bresino said she tried to save her son, Jose, but was unsuccessful. It was the second tragedy to hit the Bresino family in two months. Two months ago, the father of the child was killed in an auto accident.
