HOW TO SAVE ON TAXES—II Expense Account Deductions

Tightening of the expense account rules has been so much in the headlines in recent months that you easily may have forgotten that the strict, new limits on expense account deductions enacted by the 1962 tax law do not apply to the year 1962. I repeat, the strict new limits do not apply to money you, as a businessman, salesman or professional man spent for business travel, entertainment or gifts in 1962, even though it is now 1963 and you are now filing your return for 1962. Here's why this can mean many dollars of tax savings for you.

Under the 1962 tax law, the Internal Revenue Service has just adopted regulations which will bar any deduction for business travel, entertainment and gifts unless the items are properly entered in diaries or other statements, properly supported by receipts if in excess of a certain amount, etc.

But if you failed to keep these records for your 1962 expenses, you don't necessarily lose your deductions. You are entitled to the benefit of the so-called "Cohan" rule which was established by the courts and recognized by the Treasury until Congress put an end to it for 1963 and on.

Under this Cohan rule, if you can prove that you took a business trip—say, as a traveling salesman with a regular route—or that you are in a business or profession in which business entertainment is common practice, you are entitled to deduct a reasonable estimate of what you must have spent. This holds despite your lack of specific records to prove the exact amounts you spent on various items of travel and entertainment in 1962. In the absence of specific records, you may, of course, have a hassle with the Treasury over what is a reasonable estimate, but you are not completely barred from any deduction as you will be under the new law, applying to 1963.

If you entertained customers, prospects or clients in 1962 to build goodwill without expecting any immediate business from them, you can deduct your entertainment outlays as ordinary and necessary business expenses on your 1962 tax return. This holds, even though the 1962 tax law can bar any deduction for similar expenses in 1963.

If you gave deductible business gifts in 1962, you can deduct your full cost of these gifts as business expenses on your 1962 return. This holds, even though the law will limit your deductions to $25 a year per donee for 1963 on.

If you paid dues to belong to a social, golf or other athletic club in 1962, keep this pint in mind. For the year 1963 and on, you won't be able to deduct any part of the dues for such club memberships as entertainment expenses unless you use the club more than 50 per cent of the time for business purposes. But this does not apply to 1962. Thus, if only 25 per cent of your golf club visits during 1962 were for unquestionable business contracts, you can deduct 25 per cent of the year's dues, even though you didn't use the club more than 50 per cent of the time for business purposes.

If you took a business trip in 1962 and then went on a vacation after finishing your business, you can deduct your full transportation costs to and back home from the business destination. For similar combined business-vacation trips from 1963 on, you may lose the deduction for a proportionate part of your transportation costs if the trip lasts more than a week and 25 per cent or more of the time you spend on the trip is for such personal activities as vacationing.

If you, as an individual or firm, report your income on a 12-month fiscal year instead of a calendar year basis, you're in for a double headache when it comes to your expense account deductions.

Say that instead of reporting your income for the calendar year 1962, which runs from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31, 1962, you report on a fiscal year running from July 1, 1962, which runs from Jan. 1 through Dec. 31, 1962, your report on a fiscal year running from July 1, 1962, to June 30, 1963. Your outlays made or incurred for travel, entertainment and business gifts during the period ending Dec. 31, 1962, will be deductible according to the old rules. Your outlays made or incurred for the period after Dec. 31, 1962, may be deducted only if they meet the new, stricter tests of the 1962 tax law.

Next: State sales tax deductions.

More Than 30,000 Needed To Launch, Retrieve Astronaut

By ALVIN B. WEBB Jr.

Cape Canaveral—(UPI)—In cold mathematics, the manpower ratio of America's astronaut program is rather poor. It takes only one man to fly a spaceship, but more than 30,000 to get him up and back down.

At the moment, it can't be helped. But for scientists and engineers plotting the future of man's role in space, it is a major headache.

Manned spaceflights may someday become an everyday proposition—but not as long as a force of men equal to the population of Hackensack, N.J., must be scattered to earth's four corners for each and every mission.

The problem now is that landing techniques are a bit vague. The smallness of the early Mercury capsules dictated that the landing system be lightweight and simple. A parachute arrangement for a "touchdown" in the ocean was selected.

In America's first three manned orbital flights, it worked admirably. But it was roughly akin to using the entire power output of Grand Coulee dam just to make sure one lightbulb worked.

Of the roughly 30,000 men working on each of the three shots, the bulk was deployed in the recovery forces—centered in the Atlantic Ocean for John Glenn and Scott Carpenter, in the Pacific for Walter Schirra.

The forthcoming 34-hour flight of astronaut L. Gordon Cooper Jr. will place even more stringent manpower demands on the ships, helicopters and airplanes in the recovery force. Main recovery areas will be set up in both the Atlantic and Pacific.

Scientists, who sometimes indicate a disdain for money, recognize the economic limitations to this sort of thing. Anyway, as one space agency official put it, "There's something inelegant and unsophisticated about a parachute landing."

One serious proposal is the so-called "paraglider," an odd-looking but winged gadget that looks strikingly similar to an idea Leonardo da Vinci put on paper about the time Columbus was discovering America.

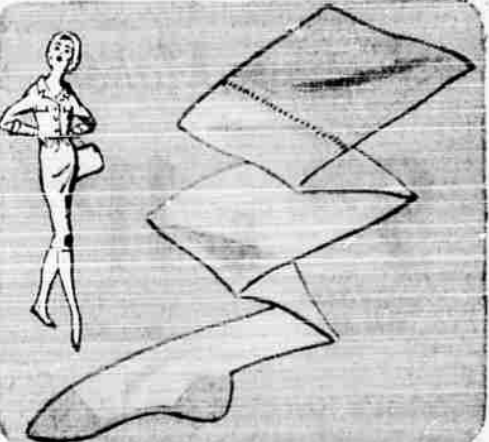

Some experts say that such a wing, about 45 feet wide, could be used with America's upcoming two-man Gemini space capsules to give the astronauts enough control to pick their return spot, perhaps on land instead of the tricky sea.

West Texas has been proposed as a landing base, but

Two People Appear In Circuit Court

Keith McBride Troxel, 43, of 460 Siskiyou blvd., Ashland, was placed on probation in Jackson county circuit court yesterday and imposition of sentence was suspended for five years on a charge of obtaining personal benefit by false pretenses.

Troxel was directed to make restitution. Troxel had pleaded guilty earlier to the charge, which involved a check.

Vaughan Alan Bigalow, 19, of 2010 East Main st., Medford, was sentenced to six months in the county jail and execution was suspended for two years. Bigalow was placed on probation on a charge of taking and using a vehicle without authorization of the owner.

Bigalow was directed to make restitution for all damage on a payment schedule satisfactory to the state board of parole and probation.

Bigalow had pleaded guilty to the charge.
