Crash May Bring Voice Recorder

Washington—UPI—The mysterious crash of a Northwest Orient Airlines Boeing 720B in the Florida Everglades Tuesday will spur development of indestructible voice recorders.

Many air safety experts believe some means of recording pilot voices will help provide the key to crashes which are becoming progressively more difficult to solve.

Experts believe the last words of a crew caught up in a life-or-death emergency might supply clues to the cause of the resulting crash.

All jet-powered airliners and some piston-engine planes now carry flight recorders. These supply data on such factors as speed, altitude, direction, G gravity; forces encountered and attitude. They are required on high-performance airliners simply because such planes are extremely complicated—and complexity makes an accident that much harder to solve.

The flight recorder on the Northwest Orient plane has been recovered and sent to Washington for analysis which may take several days or longer. But the device admittedly is second choice to a voice recorder placed in the cockpit.

Rep. Roman C. Pucinski (D-Ill.) has introduced legislation which would make installation of voice recorders mandatory on all airliners. While he has considerable support from pilots, airlines and both federal air agencies, experts point out that (1) more research is needed to perfect such a device and (2) they probably will be enormously expensive.

One estimate gives $8,000 per aircraft as the cost of a voice recorder that would be immune from impact, fire or water damage. The tentative bill for equipping about 2,000 aircraft would hit $16 million.

There is a third obstacle—the feeling of some authorities that the last words of a crew in trouble could mislead investigators. Pilots may not always recognize the source of an emergency and could give the wrong information. In one case on record, a crew radioed that a fire was raging in a baggage compartment.

A fatal crash followed, but it turned out that the fire originated outside the baggage compartment—and the pilots' last message led investigators into a fruitless search down the wrong alley.

Use of Mobile Slaughter Units Feature of Bill

Salem—UPI—A charge that uninspected meat was being used in school lunch programs was made Wednesday at a Senate Agriculture committee hearing on the farm slaughter bill.

Floyd Green, representing a Eugene meat company, voiced the charge, and urged laws prohibiting the sale of uninspected meat.

Sen. L. W. Newby (R-Ashland) asked if Green personally knew of any uninspected meat going to schools.

"I know it gets into the school program," Green answered.

"Can you prove it?" Newby asked.

"I think we could, but why should we, that's up to the state," Green replied.

Meat inspection and the use of mobile slaughtering units are key features of the bill, SB103.

Under present laws, both inspected and uninspected meat can be cut in packing houses. The proposed law would prohibit this.

Proponents of the new law say loopholes in present regulations do not prevent some packing houses from selling uninspected meat to retail outlets.

Among those favoring the bill were Donald Gardner, Medford, representing a meat packing firm. He urged "protection of consumers from uninspected meat."

Fred Boyer, Roseburg, charged "mobile slaughter units are a loophole" and can sell uninspected meat to markets.

Speaks Against Bill
John Johnson of Eagle Point, speaking against the proposed new law, said he invested $13,000 in a mobile slaughter unit. He does custom cutting, and said this was "a great asset to farmers in our area." He said passage of the bill could cause hardships for "a lot of small businesses."

He added he had never before heard of any uninspected meat being sold to retailers.

Committee Chairman Walter Leth (R-Salem) said "we have no fixed ideas on this issue, this bill was drafted so we could start discussions."

U. S. Firms Plan Displays Inside EEC Boundaries

New York—UPI—Next month, a group of United States firms will put on a "hard sell" show within the boundaries of the European Economic Community, the first time this has been done since the late December collapse of Britain's effort to enter the EEC.

The site is Utrecht, The Netherlands, March 11-19 at the Royal Netherlands Industries Fair. It was one of three which were announced as selections in early December when the Department of Commerce disclosed a broad outline of its plans to join forces with private enterprise for a sales effort of this kind.

Exclusive Goal
"The Utrecht effort," explained a bulletin issued by U.S. sources in The Netherlands, "will be the first with the exclusive goal of creating direct business results and opening channels for representation abroad."

Results of the "hard sell" show will be watched with interest by members of the exporting community—and they extend from coast to coast. One show is not likely to determine an entire trade policy, but the net outcome might be studied to determine which way the wind is blowing in European trade.

Funds Set Aside
The Commerce department has operated 127 trade fairs sponsored by the government since 1954. But a Congressional appropriation last year set aside $1.6 million to be used for sales efforts in proven overseas markets. Expansion of exports is a goal of the present administration.

A review of the business concerns which are to be represented at Utrecht can be regarded as an illustration of how broad is the involvement of American business in overseas trade. Their lines tap the consumer market, agriculture, packaging, light and heavy electrical equipment. Their home offices span the nation from Minneapolis to Tulsa, from Los Angeles to New York.

Tax Repeal Speaker Applauded

Salem—UPI—The forces behind the "liberty amendment" applauded their spokesman Wednesday night as he called for repeal of the federal income tax.

Nearly 300 reluctant taxpayers crowded into the House State and Federal Affairs committee hearing to backstop Willis E. Stone, author of the proposed amendment to the U. S. constitution.

Stone said it would mean a 20 per cent increase in take home pay.

More important, he said, it would take the federal government out of some 700 activities that are in direct competition with private enterprise, and are losing money as well.

It would strip away overgrown federal powers, he said, and return sovereignty to the states and the people.

The amendment, along with repealing the tax, would limit the federal government to only those enterprises "specified in the constitution." Stone said the cutback would save $45 billion a year.

Programs that would be eliminated include the Small Business Administration, the Tennessee Valley Authority, the Bonneville Power Administration, and the Federal School Lunch Program.

The proposal has been approved by the legislatures of Georgia, South Carolina, Louisiana, Texas, Wyoming and Nevada. If two-thirds of the states approve it, it would become a formal proposed amendment, needing final ratification by three-fourths of the states.

Two Persons Die As Hotel Burns

Peoria, Ill.—UPI—A $500,000 fire destroyed the 70-year-old Mayer hotel in downtown Peoria today, killing at least two persons and injuring eight others.

Fire Chief Lester Menace, who made the damage estimate, said the blaze apparently broke out on the top floor of the five-story building where the two badly charred bodies were found.

The hotel was inhabited mainly by elderly persons, Menace said.
