

IS THERE SUCH A THING AS A SPECIAL LAXATIVE FOR WOMEN?

So many women are asking this important question.

The answer is—yes. A remarkable new medical discovery called Dioctyl Sodium Sulfosuccinate has now made possible a special new laxative for a woman's sensitive system. We call it Correctol®.

Correctol works two ways. First, its miracle ingredient takes advantage of the natural moisture in your system. Second, its mild laxative acts gently but most effectively. Working together, Correctol's two active ingredients give a woman more natural relief than any ordinary laxative can.

Correctol is recommended any time in a woman's life, even during and after pregnancy.

Try gentle, hospital-tested Correctol... bearing the Good Housekeeping Seal. Ask your druggist for Correctol.

Marriage

minds the house. She should make it her business to read, maintain a high level of interest in her husband's business life, and encourage him to invite his friends to the house.

No time for all this? It's hard, of course, but it's important to try. The alternative is to watch a husband forge ahead and leave you behind.

After you're married, look as nice as though you weren't

"Never forget," I tell my children, "that you will be picked for marriage because you will appeal to a man or woman. You must make it your business to remain just as appealing after you say 'I do.'"

Soon after the ceremony, many pretty girls turn into unappetizing creatures at home. They don't think it's necessary to spruce up any more. Well, it is. Remember what I said about working at a marriage all the time? This is part of it. If a girl walks around the house in a frumpy housecoat and with her hair a mess, her husband soon may find himself reacting favorably to the girl in the office who is neat and sweet—just as his wife was before they were married.

Let's not skip the men here. The sight of an unshaven, half-dressed, slouching male isn't very appealing, either.

Learn the three magic words that can prevent marriage-wrecking quarrels

These are almost as momentous as "I love you," and yet so few couples use them. They are: "Maybe you're right."

The wife and husband who can say these words show they are willing to see the other person's side of the story, that they will not stubbornly insist upon having their way, that they are prepared to make compromises.

Bitter quarrels leave scars. So when an argument shows signs of developing, always think back to the three magic words that can stop a dispute from escalating into a bitter fight. You will be grateful you did.

Is there anything else you should include in your home marriage curriculum? Indeed yes, and it's perhaps the most important part:

Let your children see by your example how a marriage should be conducted

The attitudes of parents on the things that count filter down to their youngsters. By the lives we lead, the values we have, the examples we set, we teach our children what a good marriage should be.

We cannot talk honestly to them and not be honest. We cannot insist upon good behavior and not behave well. We cannot convince them of the importance of religion in their lives and not practice religion ourselves.

There is one thing more we must get across. Marriage is essentially a sharing. From their earliest years, young persons must learn that there is a sharing of responsibility for the family welfare and a division of labor. We cannot possibly impress them with the need for sharing unless we show them how we ourselves do it.

Young people won't take any more important steps in a lifetime than the ones toward the altar. They must be prepared for what lies beyond.

What better place is there for them to learn than at home—from teachers who love them very much?
