Dismissal Motion Under Advisement

Salem—UPI—A panel of three circuit judges took under advisement Thursday a motion to dismiss a labor union suit seeking to bar the state from using convict labor in the construction of the new women's prison.

The judges heard arguments by the state and an attorney for two union officials over whether the unions have the power to sue the state.

The argument hinged on the issue of the sovereign immunity of the state against suit.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Collas Marsters argued that only the legislature has the power to grant authority for a suit against the state.

Miller Opposed to House Bill 1288

County Judge Earl Miller went on record Thursday as opposed to HB 1288 when he was queried by telephone from Salem.

Explaining his stand, Miller said he believed that unions hold an important place in American society, and are necessary in certain fields but he was opposing this particular legislation in the belief that responsibility would be taken away from the people's elected officers if the measure passed.

The legislation permits public employees to join labor organizations for the purposes of representation and collective bargaining with employers but prohibits employees from striking or recognizing picket lines of labor organizations while in the performance of official duties.
