ording to Dr. James M. Whitely, Portland physician and president of the division. Dr. Eaton, a member of the division's executive committee, is a former member of the state legislature from Clatsop county and was mayor of Astoria from 1943 through 1951. He moved to Medford five years ago.

In accepting the chairmanship, Dr. Eaton asserted that "the fight to conquer cancer is deserving of the support of every person since the disease will strike 46 million Americans now alive if present rates continue."

The newly appointed chairman said the month-long campaign, beginning April 1, will stress education as well as fund-raising. Considerable emphasis will be placed on acquainting the public with cancer's seven danger signals. He pointed out that one out of every three cancer patients are now being saved compared to fewer than one out of five a quarter of a century ago. "Under ideal conditions," he said, "it would now be possible to save one out of every two patients."

Theme of the crusade will be "fight cancer with a check-up and a check."

The recent French veto of British membership in the Common Market has focused the international spotlight on the community of Europe. "A Country Called Europe," tonight at 10 p.m. on KMED-TV, NBC News will show what the Common Market is, how it works, and the changes it has brought to the lives of its 168,000,000 people.

News correspondent John Chancellor, who is narrator, describes the new community of France, Germany, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands and Luxembourg as "the greatest concentration of social, political and economic potential in the history of civilization."

The program will show how the lowering of trade barriers has set in motion a cycle that starts with an expanding market and leads to mass production, fuller employment and higher incomes.

The Common Market's direct benefits to consumers will be documented by a display of products and their prices before and after trade barriers were removed. For example, a radio that cost $48 before the Common Market now sells for $20.

The program will also show how the Common Market has permitted thousands of workers to move from less developed areas, such as Southern Italy, to industrial centers suffering from a labor shortage.

Chancellor will review the events that led to the Common Market and concludes by pointing out how the influence of the Common Market is reflected in the attitudes of the other great powers.

$183,782 Spent in Oregon To Keep Highways Clean

Salem - Keeping Oregon's highways clean and attractive cost the state highway department $183,782 during 1962, according to Forrest Cooper, state highway engineer.

Of this amount, approximately $91,500 was cleanup costs directly chargeable to serving the 700 litter barrels located on highways throughout the state.

Much of the remaining cost went to cleaning up scattered rubbish left behind by litterbugs. This work, plus the litter barrels, has resulted in the highway department's receiving many letters from out-of-state visitors complimenting the state for its clean highways.

The highway department has installed signs at strategic locations throughout the state reading "Don't Litter Highway - $100 Penalty," but not everyone heeds the warning.

"Litterbugging" along the highways of Oregon last year caused the arrest of 87 persons and fines totaling $1,107, and dumping rubbish resulted in the arrest of 83 persons and fines amounting to $1,507.50, according to the Oregon state police.

Among the cases cited was the arrest of a carefree motorist in Marion county. The patrolman observed him cruising along in a pickup, singing lustily, drinking beer and tossing the empties out the window. He was charged and convicted of litterbugging. In Klamath county, a passenger was arrested after throwing out three wine bottles; he was fined $100 and was given 20 days in jail when he couldn't pay.

A truck driver was fined $10 after emptying six quarts of oil in his motor and dumping the cans along the highway.

Seek Permission To Haul Wide Load

Request of the Lambert-Voegtly Lumber company for permission to haul stickered loads of lumber from the Tolo Cedar Mills on Blackwell road to the Southern Oregon Decking company at White City in load widths exceeding the statute by six inches was presented to the Jackson county court Friday by the county engineers.

The request will be referred to the district attorney to determine what liability the county would be assuming if the request were granted, the court decided.

The statute now limits the load width to eight feet, six inches. The lumber company's request is for a nine-foot-wide load. Temporary permission to make this type of haul was granted for one week, ending March 8, by the county engineer.

The engineer added the provision that each load would be accompanied by a flag car, alerting all motorists to the fact that a wide load was following. The concession was granted to alleviate an existing problem until a decision could be reached by the court, County Judge Earl Miller explained after Friday's meeting.

A petition from property owners on Glen Echo Way was received by the court. The property owners asked that the county grade and gravel the road and 16 home owners signed the petition.

Glen Echo Way, it was pointed out at the meeting, is a private road, and Miller and the commissioners, Don Faber and Ed Taylor, expressed doubt that the county could legally care for the problem unless Glen Echo Way became a public road. The request was referred to the county engineer.

Nominations for directors of the Rogue Basin Flood Control and Water Resources association were received by the court and approved.

On the list were Bill Jess, Eagle Point; Ben Hilton, A. A. Walker and F. I. Bristol.
