To a Gentleman in Need of a Shave
I'll own, my hero, some gents of note
Have chosen to emulate the goat
And sported a beard. There was Shakespeare, natch,

And Bluebeard flaunting an azure thatch.
Or take the Smiths, old Trade and Mark;
Take Grant with shrubbery fit for a park.
Take a bearded clam, or take a door mat
And kiss it fondly—the same type format—

To learn what's known to a million women:

When Samson suffered that famous trimmin',

Though men have labeled it deep dark
treason,

Delilah, dear, had a darn good reason!

—Georgie Starbuck Galbraith

The veteran baseball star had a streak of cruelty in him, and he usually reserved it for timid rookies. During spring training he was particularly hard on a pink-cheeked young pitcher making his first appearance in a major-league camp. "I'll knock that pitch of yours into South America," he shouted, stepping into the batter's box.

The youngster got two strikes on the old-timer, but each time he became more rattled. His third pitch went wildly out of control, but the overconfident veteran swung blindly—and struck out.

The star trudged back into the dugout silently, but at the steps he turned and yelled: "With lousy control like that, you'll never stay in the big leagues!"

So Says the Husband

At the Office

"That new dress does wonders for you, Miss Smith. I like a woman who knows clothes."

"Put another $70,000 in the advertising budget."

"Gimme the same lunch as always, Mabel—cheese on rye and coffee."

"It's a date, Pete. We'll go 36 holes next Sunday."

"I'm leaving early, Miss Smith. I'm tired enough to drop in my tracks."

At Home

"But that old purple dress always looks so good on you, honey. Why get something else?"

"What do you mean—you need an extra $10 this week?"

"Don't tell me we're having meat loaf two nights in a row!"

"Honey, would you mind running out and picking up the newspaper?"

"Stop nagging. I'll come to bed right after the late movie."

—Ben Cassell

"Can you call him back later? I'm expecting a call myself."
