

Mt. Angel Boy Dies After Shooting

Silverton, Ore. — Steven William Schaecher, 8, Mt. Angel, died at a hospital today of a gunshot wound suffered in an argument with a brother at his home Sunday.

The Marion county sheriff's office said the boy's brother, Michael, 9, and two other youngsters had been left with an 11-year-old sister, Janet, while their parents and other members of the family attended church.

The youngsters told deputies that Steven began to badger his sister.

Michael took an old shotgun from the closet of his parents' bedroom, loaded it with one shell, and pointed it at Steven, apparently seeking to frighten him.

The gun discharged, striking Steven in the hip.

Budget Cuts Given By House Republicans

Washington — House Republicans said today that without a $10 billion to $15 billion cut in President Kennedy's budget request chances for the administration's tax cut "will be almost nil."

GOP members of the House Appropriations committee outlined at a news conference savings they said could be effective without harm to the economy or to the national defense.

Small Worlds Around Us By LYNN M. WATKINS

'Kitten Moth' Larva So Ugly It Would Probably Scare Itself For her sake it's a fortunate thing this mother never sees her offspring. She probably could not survive the shock.

This youngster would even scare himself as others see him. This little character is not only hideous, he is downright terrifying. He or she, as the biological difference may be, is the offspring of a moth which is rather plentiful and known as the "prominent."

Here is a larva that possesses ugliness so great and actions so terrifying he saves himself from being eaten. He is a genuine bugaboo in spite of his small size, an overall length of an inch and a half, and smaller in diameter than a man's little finger.

The egg from which this character is hatched is laid in the litter of the forest floor. The newly hatched creature crawls forth to terrorize his own little world by his actions as well as his appearance. He has a brightly colored body, adorned with a few tufts of hair.

He is hump-backed, with a badly swollen head. Between the head and the after part of the body is a red ring which stands out in a ridge. He has a long, forked tail which plays an important part in his actions.

As if all this was not enough, the little monster spits a stream of poisonous fluid from his repulsive head for an inch or so. This fluid will blind a bird or probably kill a lesser creature. It would be a pretty foolhardy bird brave enough to face such a terrible looking object after such a terrifying experience.

Anything as obnoxious or as frightening as the larva of the "kitten moth" deserves to be left alone. Let him scare himself and the others like him.

Columbia Basin Bill Passed by House Olympia, Wash. — The House of Representatives Saturday passed a bill ratifying the Columbia Basin Interstate Compact after a bitter partisan debate.

The measure was immediately sent to the Senate for additional consideration, a parliamentary maneuver which choked off efforts to require reconsideration of the action.

Portland — Henry M. Ortiz was appointed Saturday as public relations manager for the Pacific Northwest for Southern Pacific Railroad Co.

Every so often, when a middle-aged or elderly person's chest is X-rayed, perhaps during a routine examination, a round shadow called a coin-lesion is seen on the film (a lesion is a bit of diseased tissue).

Also, if the model should happen to be full of tubercle bacilli, it would be well to remove it. Lately, the enthusiasm for removing these lesions seems to have diminished. I have just read "The San Francisco Report" on coin-lesions, and I find that of 400 patients with these round shadows in the lungs, seen at the Letterman Army Hospital in San Francisco, 52 were operated on.

The incidence of cancer among these 52 patients was only 15.4 per cent. The experts now report that today, with such experience, if 5 out of 6 X-ray specialists agree that a patient's coin-lesion does not look cancerous, the patient had better not be operated on.

Perhaps it is well not to operate even if 4 out of 6 of the body is a red ring which stands out in a ridge. He has a long, forked tail which plays an important part in his actions. On either side of the larva's fore-end are two very black, conspicuous eye spots that resemble real eyes and add to his fierce appearance.

Begins Feeding As if conscious of its safety from most enemies, the larva begins feeding on green leaves. However, a noise, a passing shadow or the violent jarring of a bush alerts the larva and he quickly makes himself terrifying. He raises the fore part of his body, waving it back and forth like a snake about to strike. He pulls his head down and back, which flattens out his fore end until it resembles a snarling face with two staring eyes.

At the same time he waves his forked tail threateningly. As if all this was not enough, the little monster spits a stream of poisonous fluid from his repulsive head for an inch or so. This fluid will blind a bird or probably kill a lesser creature. It would be a pretty foolhardy bird brave enough to face such a terrible looking object after such a terrifying experience.

The Medical Roundup by Walter Alvarez

Acromegaly Acromegaly is the disease which has produced many a circus giant. What happened to such a person was that, early in life a tiny tumor — called an adenoma — started growing in the little pituitary gland, which lies at the base of the brain and above the nasal cavity.

Various kinds of cancer and their detection are discussed by Dr. Alvarez in his booklet, "What We Know About Cancer." You may order a copy of the booklet by sending 25 cents and a self-addressed, stamped envelope with your request for it to Dr. Walter C. Alvarez, Dept. MMT, Box 957, Des Moines 4, Iowa.

Hopes for Woman Who Cannot Become Pregnant Dr. Langdon Parsons of the Boston University School of Medicine recently reported that, with the help of a special electric instrument something like an electrocardiograph, a record can be made showing when a tiny egg-like ovum comes out of one of her ovaries. Naturally, it is at this time that the woman is most likely to become pregnant.

The exciting feature about this discovery is that by using the new instrument, 67 women out of a group of 184 who had for long tried and failed to conceive, became pregnant. Among the women who still failed after the records made with the instrument, 31 had too much diseased tissue in their pelvis, and 18 had husbands who were not very fertile.

Water Vapor on Mars Confirmed by Flight Palestine, Tex. — A trouble-plagued space balloon survey of Mars confirmed the presence of water vapor and carbon dioxide on the planet and may reveal "significant" new information about Earth's sister in space, scientists said Monday.

Dr. Martin Schwarzschild of Princeton University, director of the Stratoscope II project that sent the unmanned balloon to the edge of space with a telescope, reported that preliminary results merely proved previous scientific beliefs about Mars. Schwarzschild and Dr. Harold Weaver of the University of California, said examination of tape-recorded information in a little "blue box" and in the telemetry system of the balloon's payload undoubtedly will reveal some of Mars' secrets.

"We hope to obtain significant data," Schwarzschild said. The balloon launched at Palestine, southeast of Dallas, Friday carried a 6,300-pound payload to an altitude of 77,000 feet. It drifted eastward and landed Saturday intact near Pulaski, Tenn.

Khrushchev Wins in Russian Election Moscow — Moscow Radio made the expected day-after-election announcement today that at least 99 per cent of the Soviet Union's electorate turned out to choose new regional and local parliaments.

With only the Communist-nominated slate of candidates to pick from and the results a foregone conclusion, it was no surprise that Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev won unanimous election from Moscow's Kalainin District.

The Family Council

Editor's note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychiatrist, three clergymen, three editors and a women's editor. Each article is a summary of a family disagreement presented to the Council. The Council deals with problems, major and minor, encountered by guidance counselors and social workers. Edited by Mrs. Alma Denny. (Copyright by General Features Corp.)

Wilma T. — She keeps all family news to herself. Mrs. G. T. — Why should I be the tale-bearer?

Wilma T. — This isn't a world-shaking problem but it's darn annoying. I have a 78-year-old mother who's hale and hearty, maintains her own apartment, and also makes three trips a year around the country. During these forays, she visits my five brothers and sisters and manages to see quite a number of cousins and friends, too.

I stop in to see her every day when she's at home. Wouldn't you think she'd pass along the items of family news she picked up on her last trip, from Christmas to Washington's birthday? No. She hoards them. But she expects me to tell her anything I hear! I just got a card from my brother, for instance, saying he won a promotion. My mother knew it but never told me.

Mrs. G. T. — I doubt whether anyone would tell me anything if they felt I was going to spread everything I heard from coast to coast. I wouldn't blame them. Wilma found out about the promotion without me. That's how it should be. Her brother wrote her direct. Anything she's supposed to know she can find out directly from the person it happened to. She shouldn't count on me to be the family gossip reporter.

Wilma shouldn't be snoopy. She's always trying to squeeze gossip out of me. She wants to read my letters, not just the ones I receive but the ones I write. I tell her to write her own and read her own. Whatever I know should stay with me.

The Council: Mrs. T. is using tid-bits of family news the way the animal trainer uses hunks of fish for the seals. She withholds them to watch Wilma beg!

Strange how behavior like this is the string which pulls back the curtain on a sad mother-daughter situation which has been building, no doubt, for decades. To spotlight the tensions, the hurt egos, let's envisage the opposite — a family where it's "all for one and one for all," as Grace Fields used to sing during World War II. Here, a telephone call to one is a telephone call to all, with the sign-off words usually, "Pass it along!" And letters turn into round-robins, being circulated among the brothers and sisters — except in rare instances where there's a good reason for containment.

Ideally where egos are healthy and pettiness never rears its whiny head, it saves a lot of duplication to tell family news to one and add, "Pass the word." Here we find Mrs. T.'s pettiness is set up as the roadblock to family unity and communion. "What you tell me," she's saying, "I won't tell anyone else, no matter how casual it is. At the same time, don't you dare not tell me everything you hear. And that includes you, Wilma!"

With six children, does Mrs. T. really expect them to write six letters every time a baby cuts a first tooth, a roof gets fixed, a childhood friend turns up? Withholding such innocuous items is senseless. Only a woman who is desperate for power and attention would clam up to that extent.

Wilma should canvass the others. She may be able to get them to agree to instruct her mother to share the news, or pain of not getting any more. Only when specifically requested not to tell (and that may be rare) will Mrs. T. be justified in her smug attitude of "it's for me to know and you to find out."

Hoover Receives Stanford Medal New York — Former President Herbert Hoover today received a solid gold medal from the Stanford Alumni Association for more than 70 years of "distinguished service" to the University and the nation.

Guy R. Neely of Phoenix Ariz., president of the association, made the presentation at Hoover's suite in the Waldorf Astoria Towers. It is called the Herbert Hoover Medal for Distinguished Service and was established last year by the association.

Hoover, who was a member of Stanford's first freshman class in 1891, has served more than 50 years on the university's board of trustees.

At Stanford he established the Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace. He also helped in planning the university's first Student Union, organizing the Food Research Institute and establishing the graduate school of business.

NOW YOU KNOW By United Press International Zoologists have found young male lemurs, primates from Madagascar, living in isolation in that country's forests. A young male, according to the American Museum of Natural History, will often dispute with dominant older males in its community and as a result may be exiled forever.

"DON'T PEOPLE EVER GIVE CANDY WHEN THEY HAVE NEW BABIES?"

THE CP SOUND/CONDITIONER

Quiet? How to Achieve It

Silence has been defined as the lack of sound; quiet as the lack of distraction. Psychologists say that quiet is preferable, since some sound is necessary to our mental health. Research indicates that sound is present at all times. However, there are many sounds that irritate and disturb us. These include office machines, traffic, voices, crying babies, distracting night noises, and many others.

An electronic instrument has now been introduced which conditions objectionable noises and creates a tranquil environment for the subconscious mind. Called the CP Sound/Conditioner, the new instrument shuts off disturbing noises with soft, constant sounds that relax and provide acoustical privacy. One of the most effective sounds is called white sound. This is a composite of all sound frequencies audible to the human ear, blended at equal intensities. The unit offers a choice of white sound, modified white sound, rain and surf.

There are many places where the CP Sound/Conditioner is useful... in offices, in homes, or when traveling. In fact any place where noisy conditions exist. Students find it useful for studying in noisy surroundings. When exasperating noises occur during the sleeping hours it can mean the difference between restful sleep or sleeplessness. It is especially desirable for those away from home when subject to strange or unusual sounds.

The CP Sound/Conditioner is transistorized and operates on flashlight batteries. It is small in size, easily carried, and ideal for use when traveling. Be sure to see these attractive instruments at The Acorn Press, 325 North Bartlett, Medford, Oregon. Adv.
