

Barton, Governor Disagree on School Aid

Speaker Believes State Has Place For Federal Aid

Salem — (UPI) — House Speaker Clarence Barton today disagreed with Gov. Mark Hatfield over the issue of federal aid for Oregon's schools.

Barton said congressmen should contact educators, not the governor, to determine the state's feelings on the need for federal school aid.

Hatfield recently told Rep. Sam M. Gibbons (D-Ela.), a member of the House Education and Labor committee which is considering President Kennedy's omnibus federal education bill, that he did not feel Oregon wanted federal school aid.

"I don't think the governor speaks for the majority of the people on this question," Barton said.

Support Program Cited
Barton pointed to Oregon's basic school support program where some "have not" areas share with "have" areas. Federal aid is designed to do the same thing at the federal level.

"Oregon is a colonial state. If it were not for federal grants all our money would go to Detroit or to the California oil fields.

"There is a place for federal aid in Oregon's school program," the House speaker stated.

Barton said he expected the legislature's "blackjack" tax bill would be tabled because Washington Gov. Albert D. Rosellini has signed into law a bill permitting the state to enter reciprocal agreements covering industrial injuries.

The agreement is for use where the employment contract is made in one state and the work performed in another.

Measure Drafted
Oregon officials asked Washington to pass the bill, and drafted a "blackjack" measure to tax out-of-state workers when it appeared that the Washington legislature might not honor the request.

Senate President Ben Musa termed "doubtful" the chances of highway bond issue proposals now before the legislature. He said the highway bond program had been successful, however, and had helped for the highway commission to consider "grass root" demands for highway improvements.

Musa also said he would oppose an increase in the gasoline tax at the present time.

Roy Vagues Host Medford Trailriders

Mr. and Mrs. Roy Vague were hosts to the Medford Trailriders in their home March 9 at White City. Twenty-four members attended the meeting and approved the application for membership of Thomas Gray, Jacksonville.

The group agreed to accept the invitation from George McNe, owner of the Jacksonville Hayride concession, to visit the Jacksonville corral and accept his offer which would enable the Trailriders to use any of the equipment necessary at the corral for a barbecue.

Ken Finley, Medford, discussed the problems some of owners of mares have encountered recently, on locating a suitable stud.

March 24 the Trailriders will meet in the Boy Scout building at Eagle Point for a potluck at 3 p.m. Dancing will be provided following the meeting.

People Reminded of Hazards on Property

Central Point — Chief of Police Ed Zander, Central Point, has reminded local residents to correct property hazards which are being neglected.

In recent safety investigations in Central Point, attractive nuisances particularly dangerous to small children were discovered, Zander said.

"Numerous reports have been made to this department concerning machinery left with hoists and shovels raised, unattended jacked-up cars, neglected dug wells and abandoned refrigerators and iceboxes," Zander noted.

Reminders have been mailed to known offenders, he continued. However, there may be many unreported hazards.

Residents may notify the police or street departments about abandoned wells. They will be filled, in most cases without charge, by the city. Officials suggested that long-time residents who may know the location of unused wells contact the police department.

Chief Zander strongly emphasized the danger of leaving old refrigerators and iceboxes with locks intact where children could be tempted to play in them.

Hatfield Denies Feuding With Legislature

Arguments Said Matter of Issues, Not Bitterness

Salem — (UPI) — On a soothing note, Gov. Mark Hatfield denied Monday afternoon that he was feuding with the legislature and repudiated reports of deep-seated personal bitterness.

The governor said his arguments of the past week were a matter of issues, not personalities.

He said differences over civil defense and the budget-cutting policies of the Ways and Means Committee had been "politicized" too much. "It takes two to feud, and I'm not feuding," he told a news conference.

The governor's tone was in marked contrast to his angry denunciation of "meat cleaver" budget cutting a week ago.

Those words sparked heated retorts from legislators over what many considered a personal attack on the members of the Ways and Means Committee.

Agrees With Leaders
Hatfield's latest remarks jibed with those of House Speaker Clarence Barton and Senate President Ben Musa a few hours earlier. Barton said last week's running battle was "not personal" and Musa said Hatfield had a right to fight for issues as he saw them.

It seemed to be an effort on all sides to remove some of the sting from the fight. Until last week, cooperation between the Republican governor and the Democratic controlled legislature had been stressed.

Hatfield made it clear he would continue to fight for issues, however, by delivering another round in support of the State Civil Defense Agency which many legislators want to abolish.

On other matters, Hatfield said:

Traffic Safety — If the legislature was concerned about saving lives, it would stop talking about the storm and concentrate on the 78 lives lost in traffic in Oregon so far this year. He called for passage of his traffic safety program, including seat belts, speed limits, implied consent, and expanded arrest power.

Recreation — He had written U.S. Senate Minority Leader Everett Dirksen urging his support for the federal outdoor recreation bill. Dirksen has said he will oppose it.

Party — He planned to continue frequent meetings with Republican leaders in the legislature, and would continue to attend some GOP caucuses as well.

Plant — The state was helping in a plant survey to determine the feasibility of locating a proposed pharmaceutical plant in the Newport area.

People Reminded of Hazards on Property

Stocks Make Seventh Straight Small Gain on Dull Turnover

New York — (UPI) — Stocks turned in their seventh consecutive small gains on dull turnover today.

Only some concerted interest in tobacco stocks and firmness in the steels broke up the boredom.

All five leading cigarette stocks—American, Reynolds, Lorillard, Liggett & Myers and Philip Morris—rose a point or more on news the American Medical Association was dropping its study into the alleged link between smoking and various diseases.

Steels were up fractions to over a point in a few instances, apparently responding to a sixth consecutive weekly production rise in the industry last week.

For a time in the second hour when trading picked up it looked as if the bullish tobacco news might touch off a general rally but demand quickly dried up.

SOC Represented At Civil War Event

Ashland — Dr. Vaughn Bernet, chairman of the social science division, represented Southern Oregon college at the Conference on the Civil War at Stanford university recently.

Dr. Bernet was research associate in 1951-53 for the Institute of American History, which sponsored the recent event.

More than 400 historians heard and discussed the courses and origins of the American Civil War in the light of recent research, writings, an interest occasioned by the Centennial.

Upon returning to SOC, Dr. Bernet discussed new data and materials brought up at the conference with American History classes, comparing what was said with versions of the same events appearing in the texts used by students.

Subjects discussed included "Why the Republican party came to power in 1860," and "Why the southern states seceded."

Dr. Bernet, whose interest in the Civil War goes back to his undergraduate work at Emory university, Georgia, and graduate work at the University of Georgia, has written a number of articles on the subject.

California Money Condition Argued

Sacramento — (UPI) — State Finance Director Hale Champion and the State Chamber of Commerce were millions of dollars apart today on the financial condition of California.

Leslie D. Howe, tax department director for the chamber, told the Assembly Ways and Means committee Monday:

"The need is pressing to make a major reduction in the proposed 1963-64 general fund budget. Without such action, Californians' tax payments will be increased considerably . . . by larger tax increases in the following years."

But Champion fired back that the chamber was being "unrealistic" and its projections of state income and expenditure were "unrelated to the specifics of state budgeting and lacking in understanding of the state's program requirements."

Howe said bluntly that California needs to improve its business climate and warned against "constant tinkering with the tax system to meet recurring fiscal crises."

Liquor in Bowling Alleys Tabled

Salem — (UPI) — A bill to outlaw liquor in bowling alleys was tabled by the House Alcoholic Control Committee Monday because it went too far.

Liquor commission officials said as a matter of policy they had been denying liquor permits to bowling alleys, and that only 17 alleys with permits now existed.

Objection was raised to the bill because its wording would have eliminated sale of liquor in baseball parks, race tracks, and other areas where the prohibition was not desired.

The committee also decided to hold two other bills to wait for similar Senate bills to arrive in the committee, so the companion measures could be considered together. One dealt with hidden ownership of liquor licenses, the other with clarifying the intent of present laws which outlaw drinking by minors.

Misleading Land Schemes In Oregon Topic of Hearing

Salem — (UPI) — The problem of fraudulent and misleading advertising for subdivisions and land schemes in Oregon occupied the House Planning and Development committee for more than two hours Monday.

Atty. Gen. Robert Y. Thornton and Real Estate Commissioner Robert J. Jensen both supported bills they had drafted to halt operations of what Jensen termed "marginal and unscrupulous subdividers."

The proposed laws would outlaw misleading statements, and require bonds by developers to assure that promised improvements would be made. Violation would be punishable by a $5,000 fine and a year in jail.

The attorney general said he had been studying the problem for "more than one year."

He said the main problem involved with desert land promotions in Central and Eastern Oregon was that people were not familiar with the area.

"People not familiar with the lack of water and the isolation are about to be defrauded in large numbers," Thornton said.

"A review of existing law shows there is nothing we can do to restrain these operations at the present time. He said the advertisements were "very skillfully worded," and the "greatest misrepresentation is failure to disclose all of the facts."

Thornton termed the problem "one of the five major serious issues confronting the legislature this session."

Rep. Berkeley Lent (D-Portland) opposed a agency rule-making powers called for in the proposed legislation.

"It's another case of the legislature abdacting its power to a state agency," Lent said.

Thornton replied, "isn't that cutting off your nose to spite your face? I'd rather have the section cut from the bill than lose the legislation."

Many Are Questionable
Jensen said many of the 60 subdivisions now being developed in the state were "questionable."

He said the proposed laws were patterned after laws now in force in California.

Learn to Swim Campaign Slated
Donald E. Day, aquatic chairman, announced this week that a Learn to swim campaign for Medford school students in the second, third and fourth grades will be conducted during spring vacation, March 18 through 22, at the Medford YMCA.

The program is set up to accommodate 250 students, 20 in each class. Five lessons will be provided for each student enrolled, one each day. The classes will be set up according to school and will not be interchangeable. Since it may not be possible to accommodate all students who wish to enroll, priority will be given to non-swimmers in the fourth grade.

Applications have been sent to the schools and will be distributed to students. These should be completed as soon as possible and returned to the schools. Lesson periods will be assigned by the YMCA and parents will be notified by mail.

Instructors for the program will be Ben Jensen, YMCA physical director, and a staff of three assistants. The classes will be conducted at the Y pool and the only equipment needed by the students will be swimming suits and towels.

Hawaii and Arizona.

"Give us a strong law, or don't give us any law at all," Jensen pleaded.

Rep. Bob Chappel (R-Portland) said he had reports that national crime syndicates were moving into the field.

Lake County District Attorney Chick Chaloupka said his county supported the proposed law.

He said, "thousands of lots have been sold in one tract, a city of 8,000 people is planned."

Lake County Judge C. W. Ogle said his county hasn't yet recovered from a 1909 development, and urged adoption of the laws.

Ben D. Bulletin Publisher and Editor Robert Chandler said land scheme advertisers misrepresented "water, ground and climate."

Opposition to the proposal was voiced by Russell Tripp, speaking for the Albany Realty Board. He said legislation was needed, but that the proposed laws would work a hardship on legitimate subdividers.

The committee said further hearings would be scheduled.
