Chamber Official Tells Ashlanders Planning Needed

Ashland—James C. Schill, manager for the western district of the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, visited the Ashland Chamber Tuesday to conduct what he called a "brainstorm session." He spoke to chamber members at their weekly luncheon at the Mark Antony hotel.

Schill had praise for Ashland on one hand, calling it an attractive city, but then he asked chamber members if they could not be doing more than they already are.

"We can't just plan for one year ahead in this day and age," Schill said. "We must project plans far in advance. We must be willing to change with the times—or else go out of business."

As an example, the speaker noted that the Seattle, Wash., Chamber of Commerce has projected plans as far ahead as the year 2000.

Something to Sell

A chamber has to have something to sell, Schill said, and it has to have a budget to back up the specific projects it is promoting.

Schill tossed out a few ideas for specific projects, emphasizing that he had no idea whether they would apply to the Ashland area. "That is for you to determine," he told the chamber.

Schill's ideas including doing something to perpetuate the central core of the city, working with agriculture to increase the profits of the farmers and taking steps to reduce the percentage of dropouts between the ninth and twelfth grades.

Study Safflower Growth

He noted that the Silverton, Ore., Chamber is devoting half its budget to a test to see if safflower can be grown in that area for the benefit of farmers' incomes.

Regarding dropouts, Schill said the statewide dropout percentage is 24.8. Each youth who fails to complete high school results in a loss of thousands of dollars of income to merchants in his community.

Schill said he realized that many such ideas are "controversial," but he added, "Don't worry about controversy. Progress itself is controversial. If a poll were taken right here it would probably show that a majority of Ashlanders are against progress."

Plans to Handle Conditions At Jefferson Are Reviewed

At present, first and third graders are utilizing one room, and present plans are for a combination of first and second graders in one classroom next year.

School administrators have pointed out that pupils attending class in such situations are grouped as homogenously as possible, and if parents wish their child transferred to a regular classroom, the child is moved. Administrators pointed out, too, that teachers in such situations are carefully selected so the pupil does not suffer academically.

The plan for next year to have a "split" class of first and second graders is part of the fifth alternative offered to help relieve the situation at Jefferson school.

Other Part of Plan

The other part of the plan concerns the fourth grade, which next year will have 69 or 70 pupils, a fact about which concern was expressed by the Jefferson school area delegation.

This plan, as outlined by Dr. Elliott Becken, assistant superintendent, at a recent meeting, has two alternatives. One would be to have two fourth grade classes of about 35 students each with a half-time teacher associated in each classroom. The other alternative would be to have one class of 30 students, and the other class of 40 students with a full-time teacher associate to help the regular teacher.

Teacher associates are planned in several elementary schools in the district under the Oregon Program for Education Improvement in cooperation with Southern Oregon college and the state department of education.

Plans Are Flexible

Dr. Becken pointed out that present plans are flexible, and administrators can not at this time say definitely which plan may be adopted at Jefferson school.

Dr. Mayfield stressed that any plan suggested for adoption has to be approved by the state department of education. He assured the delegation last night that additional personnel at Jefferson school would help relieve the situation anticipated in the number of fourth grade pupils.

Hosick said an area encompassing more than 20 acres may be developed in the Jefferson school area off Garfield ave. within the near future. Access to the tract was purchased within the past few days, he said, and added that development of the area could start soon.

Would Check Development

Dr. Mayfield said his staff will look into the development question since it would have a bearing on attendance at Jefferson. Because acquisition of access to property to be developed was within the past few days, school administrators were not aware of the transaction, he said.

Keith Hockersmith, board chairman, reviewed the board's problem in holding to a minimum the number of classrooms planned for construction before the 1963-64 school year.

He pointed out that additional elementary classrooms are needed at several schools, and were planned to be included in a bond issue which would have financed construction of additional high school facilities as well as elementary classrooms.

Bond Issue Postponed

However, because of attempts during the past year to consolidate part or all of the Phoenix-Talent district to Medford, consideration of a bond issue had to be postponed until after that question was settled. This has resulted in a delay of about a year on the district's construction plans.

Hockersmith pointed out that during budget sessions, 10 additional elementary classrooms were originally considered. After reviewing attendance and census figures, and reviewing plans for handling students, the budget committee and school administrators believed the minimum number of classrooms needed next year could be reduced to five without jeopardizing the academic program.

He noted, however, that if classrooms are not added to Wilson and Lone Pine schools, some pupils in the primary grades will be double-shifted, a situation which the board has tried to avoid.

The number of additional classrooms planned through the operating budget was held to a minimum in the interests of economy, Hockersmith said, pointing out that the proposed budget is a considerable increase over this year's general fund.

Show Slight Decline

Attendance and census figures show a slight decline in Jefferson school attendance, and a greater-than-expected increase in the Wilson and Lone Pine school areas, he said, a point which also was considered in planning classrooms, for next year.

Other elementary classrooms are planned, including at least two at Jefferson, as soon as the district's construction program can be redetermined and a bond issue called, Hockersmith pointed out.

The Jefferson school problem probably will be discussed again at the public hearing on the proposed budget for 1963-64, which will be held at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Hedrick Junior High school.

The delegation from the Jefferson school area attending last night's meeting included Mrs. Rita Shogren, Mr. and Mrs. Hosick, Mrs. Kay Philips, Mrs. Betty Orahood and Mrs. Lee Eisinstein.

Budd Gail Named to Assistant's Post

Budd Gail, 416 South Groveland ave., Medford, was named assistant postmaster of the Medford post office in the list of promotions in the supervisory staff announced Tuesday by Acting Postmaster J. A. Eidswick.

The vacancy in the position of assistant postmaster occurred with the recent death of Prentice Petty in a veterans hospital in California.

Succeeding Gail as superintendent of mails is Chet Stilliman, 62 Winema Way, who has been assistant superintendent of mails.

Boyce Kellogg, 1548 Whitman place, becomes assistant superintendent of mails, and Virgil Swanson, 518 Park st., has been appointed to the new position of foreman of carriers.

Boyd Kline, 522 Franquette st., is foreman of clerks.

The promotions are to become effective Saturday, March 16, Eidswick said.

Cascade Gorge Store Is Sold

The sale involves approximately 18 acres. The Cascade Gorge store was built about 1920 and has had several owners. Selling the property to the Rogers couple were Mrs. Lela Bean and Robert Bean of Prospect.

Mr. and Mrs. Rogers have moved to the Prospect area. They plan to remodel the existing buildings and add new cabins.
