Pigs Being Used In Research Study

Washington - 876 - Fatties may not like it, but pigs are being used at Colorado State university college of veterinary medicine to simulate people, the U. S. department of agriculture reports.

Pigs were chosen in the fat research primarily because they become fat, like to lie around, eat everything on the menu and spontaneously develop atherosclerosis - excess fat clogging artery walls.

4-H NEWS

Needle Threaders
The fifth meeting of the Needle Threaders 4-H club was called to order recently at 122 West 11th st. in the home of Carla and Delcy Dible. Secretary Donya Koepke read the minutes and they were approved.

Linda Denbo gave an interesting talk on cosmetics. Mrs. Lemacks, our leader, gave an interesting talk on how to use your sewing machine and attend to it and how to sew different materials. Everyone has been busy on their projects of sewing and knitting. Treats were served by Judy Lemacks.

Rogue Rock Rovers
The meeting of the Rogue Rock Rovers 4-H club was called to order by President Hugh Charley. The meeting was held at Mr. Harrison's Rock Shop on Ross lane.

Plans for the 4-H window display were discussed. The members were asked to take their oddest, prettiest, and d polished rocks. Next meeting will be at leader Eldred Charley's home.

The 4-H window was fixed March 3 by Hugh and Clay Charley, Steve and Jeff Ross, Paul Larson, Curt Charley and the leaders. It is in the old beauty shop in Central Point. The 4-H Pledge was painted on a rock tumbler and turns so you can read it all.

Eagle Point Sewettes
Mrs. Ben Moore, leader of the Eagle Point Sewettes 4-H club, talked with the second year girls about bias, filling and straightening cloth, at the last meeting. It was held at the home of Lorraine and Gean Hamann.

All second year girls are to have their material for their aprons or skirts which will be their main project for the year by the next meeting. She also handed out booklets on skin care.

The first year girls talked about their place mats which will be their main project for the year. All first year girls are to have their towels and washcloths at the next meeting.

It was voted to have an Easter party at the home of Ruth Greb at the next meeting.

Susan Modes was a visitor. Ruth Greb and Diana Stevens were unable to attend the meeting. Ha Moore, Gloria Hollis, and Lorraine Hamann gave reports on the officers' meeting at Central Point.

Phoenix Brush Busters
Members of the Phoenix Brush Busters 4-H club planned a window display for 4-H Week during the recent meeting.

The last meeting of the club was held at Mr. Lawson Scott's home.

We picked a committee to put the display in the window. They are Lorna Fowler, Sam James, Lawson Scott, Mrs. Scott and Bill James.

Lorna Fowler gave a demonstration on first aid. It was mostly on cuts and burns on the arm and what to do away from home. Lorna showed us how to fix a cut on the wrist, or fingers and what to do when there is a burn on the forearm.

She said that one kind of cloth works better than others. The next meeting will be at Hugh Hendrickson's place March 23.

Gold Hill Livestock
The third meeting of the Gold Hill Livestock 4-H club was held recently at the home of Norman Gail. We had several new members.

The minutes were read and approved.

Under the old business we approved 20 goals for the coming year and discussed the program that a committee had worked out.

With our new business we set annual dues at 75 cents. Marie Jones, Laura Thomas, Elizabeth Tate, and Peggy Martin were appointed to set displays for 4-H Week.

Mr. Gail, the judge, gave instructions on judging sheep. The meeting was adjourned. The club sang songs and played ping pong. Mrs. C. N. Gail served refreshments.

Family Council

Editor's Note: The Family Council consists of a judge, a psychologist, three clergymen, a newspaper editor, a woman's editor, and two writers. Each member is a member of an actual case history. The Council reports on problems that are dealt with by responsible agencies and consultants.

Phyllis F. - I can't stand my kid brother.
Mrs. L. F. - She does nothing but rebuff him.

Phyllis F. - If my parents don't let me go to boarding school soon, they'd better send my brother to a military academy. One of us has got to go.

Larry is 8 and I'm 14. I wouldn't touch him with a ten-foot pole if I had my way, but he makes me touch him, yell at him, chase him, because he's underfoot wherever I turn.

If I'm on the phone, he's on the extension listening and butting in. If I have fri-da over, he'll try to monopolize them with his magic tricks. And his usual way of saying hello to me is with a punch to the left or a jab to the right. Life under the same roof with him is just no life for me.

Mrs. L. F. - I've tried to help Phyllis understand her little brother. All he wants from her is a little attention. Her attitude toward him seems to be that she doesn't exist, so of course he finds many ways to prove to her that he does. We've punished him for some of the really mean things, like marking up her mirror with her lipstick. But we can understand his butting into her affairs, because she goes out of her way to shut him out. If she'd only put her arm around him some day and ask him what's new in school, well, he might think he's dreaming at first, but he'd wind up her willing slave. The friction is largely her own fault.

The Council: Even in the best-regulated household, where Momma loves Poppa and Sista loves Brotha, an 8-year-old tyke will shoot out one leg to trip a peer just for the heck of it. Things get too quiet for him. He's loved, accepted, well-adjusted. But he's bored and he knows a dozen ways to stir up a storm at home. So we can't promise Phyllis that the heart-and-flowers approach, recommended by her mother, will insure sugar-pie serenity around the house henceforth and forevermore.

We do understand Mrs. F.'s answer, however. Larry's behavior toward his big sister may be described as "getting close" to her, getting a rise out of her - even if the rise includes smacking him and hollering for help from Mamma. So perhaps a few friendly steps in his direction, on her part, would go a mile. It's not just flies that fall for honey. Kid brothers get "trapped" into undying loyalty and partisanship that way, too.

First, Phyllis, try to look at life through this little fellow's eyes. You seem to be doing such interesting, exciting, glamorous things compared to his multiplication tables. So ask him How're things? What new trading cards did he get lately? When's the exhibition game at the Boys' Club? Thus you can make him see his own life as noteworthy.

Then, make a point - even if your joints crack - of including him in some areas of your activities. By a quirk of human nature, this makes it easier for you to get rid of him when you want to. "This is my time with you," gives a placid opening for, "and please understand that I need some time without you." But tell him a secret, have a confidential pact, bring him along on a picnic, let him take the coats at a party. Such legitimate recognition should reduce his need to force himself upon you.

Finally, understand enough to praise him once in a while. Others do. We'll wager that some of your friends find Larry cute and lovable and envy you.
