New Constitution Needed By Oregon, Says Lawyer

"If Oregon doesn't seize this opportunity to revise its constitution, another may not come along for another 20 years," said Mrs. Barbara Ashley Phillips, Medford attorney, speaking yesterday noon for a meeting of the Eleanor Roosevelt league at the Medford hotel. Mrs. Phillips believes that revision is of vital importance to the state.

Mrs. Phillips is a member of a citizens committee organized to provide information about the effort to draft a new Oregon constitution. She pointed out that the present constitution, drafted and adopted in 1859, is outdated and outmoded in many respects in spite of having been amended more than 100 times.

The lawyer said that under the present constitution, the state's chief executive does not have the power to do his work as he should, and that there is no system of checks for the governor or other members of the board of control. "There is nothing more frightening than a headless bureaucracy," she added. "We should have a governor who is not necessarily strong, but responsible."

Document Drawn

Reminding her listeners that a commission of citizens, representing various parties and walks of life, had drawn up a document for submitting to this legislature, Mrs. Phillips said she believes that the legislature will report "something out" for the ratification of the state's citizens.

The document drawn up by the commission provides for only one elected state official, the governor, for a controller to be responsible to the legislature, and annual sessions of the legislature. She said the document contains a number of "modern concepts" but also retains provisions, such as the initiative and referendum, which are Oregon's traditions.

Should Be Broad

She reminded her listeners that a constitution should be broad and general, "a skeleton on which to hang a government."

Under the proposed constitution, the governor would have the power to appoint heads of the various agencies and these appointments would be concurrent with his term. As it is, a governor may only appoint new agency heads when terms expire. He could remove appointees for cause. The proposed constitution would make it possible to achieve some singleness of purpose from these agencies, and would also encourage economy by eliminating duplication, she believes.

The proposed controller would combine certain functions now exercised in a limited area by the secretary of state and the attorney gen-

Cecile is the name which Mrs. Neil Davidson gave to this French doll, one of the most valuable in her collection. Cecile, wearing a tea gown handmade by Mrs. Davidson, was one of the dolls which the collector showed recently at Rogue Valley Manor. Another portion of her 400-doll collection will be put on display at Swem's store beginning Monday, March 18. This will be of French fashion dolls only. Other exhibits are being planned by Mrs. Davidson.

Observances Are Planned For CFG Birthday Week

During this week, groups will hold annual birthday dinners, the first being Talent-Phoenix groups on March 19, in the Talent city hall.

"Today's program for today's girl, strives to encourage in each girl a love of home, family, and country, and application of her religious, spiritual and ethical teachings," according to a Camp Fire statement.

"There are seven crafts which represent the seven points in a girl's education that will always be important, home, outdoor life, citizenship, creative arts, frontiers, sports and games, and business."

Gold Hill Club Elections Held

Gold Hill - Mrs. Earl Moore was elected president of the Past Noble Grands club of Amethyst Rebekah lodge at a meeting of the group held at the home of Mrs. Raymond Thompson. Materials have been donated for the Treasure chest project which will benefit the Odd Fellows building fund. Mrs. Clarence Parsley has charge of this project as chairman and Mrs. Harry Newham is co-chairman. Some items placed in the chest are handmade dollies, aprons, pillow cases, bath towels, hand-knit bedroom slippers and many others.

Plans were made for the annual past grands dinner for members and their families to be held in the dining room at the Gold Hill Community Methodist church. It is slated for Monday, March 25 at 6:30 p.m.

Girl Scouts

Troop 55 - Gold Hill - Girl Scouts of Troop 55 heard Mrs. Walter Doherty speak on experiences of her life when she was a citizen of Australia. At a recent meeting of the group Mrs. Doherty spoke and presented pictures of interest concerning ocean liners that carry passengers to and from Australia. This program was in conjunction with work the Scouts are doing to earn their second class badge in international friendship, according to Mrs. Paul Holderness, leader of Troop 55.

Also during the month of February, 21 Scouts from Gold Hill attended the International festival held at Gold Hill Scout headquarters in Medford. The Scouts wore appropriate Hawaiian costumes they had made and danced a hula selection. Transportation was provided by Mrs. Raymond Kinney, Mrs. Bernard Bearrs, Mrs. Vernon Czowski, and Mrs. Paul Holderness.

On March 2, Girls of Troop 55 joined Scouts from throughout the valley at Medford for a Once A Month Session to participate in singing activities. Mrs. Gene Holderness and Mrs. Dale Hodson accompanied the girls on this trip.

Mrs. Holderness reports the Scouts are working towards their badge for hiking. During spring vacation plans are that the Scouts will hike from Gold Hill to the Hodson home on Galls creek one day, a distance of about 2 miles.

French Dolls To Be Shown At Swem's

French fashion dolls from the collection of Mrs. Neil O. Davidson, 1708 Lenora drive, will be displayed in the window of Swem's store beginning Monday, March 18.

Mrs. Davidson, who has collected dolls for the past several years, has more than 400. Many of them are the Bru dolls from France, and dolls from this factory are known among collectors for their beauty and fine workmanship. During World War II the factory was destroyed, including the molds from which the heads were made, and the dolls are no longer being manufactured.

Fine Bru dolls are therefore becoming scarcer and collectors are now paying handsome prices in order to acquire them.

A short time ago Mrs. Davidson displayed a group of dolls at Rogue Valley Manor, and many visitors saw the exhibit during the four-hour show. One of these was Cecile, an excellent Bru which Mrs. Davidson has dressed in a white tea gown of a bygone period. The collector made the gown of fine white cotton and lace, and the underclothing, which she also made, is trimmed with handmade thread lace.

The clothing is as much of a hobby with Mrs. Davidson as are the dolls themselves. In addition to dresses and suits, Mrs. Davidson makes hats and even shoes. Some of the stockings worn by the dolls are elaborate lace creations which are many years old.

Cecile was bought by a collector a number of years ago from a Midwest family, but who brought the doll to this country is not known. Cecile has a fine bisque head and the body is composition.

Considered works of art, collector's dolls, of course, are not playthings for children. Often they are considered valuable museum pieces; their design clothing and accessories reflect something of the times in which they were made.
