Social Work Change Due Bureau Chief Declares

A major new step soon in the evolution of social work in the United States has been predicted by Mrs. Katherine B. Oettinger, chief of the Children's Bureau, U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Mrs. Oettinger stated: "We have almost completely changed our philosophy about what the social worker can and should do in the past 30 years. Before passage of Federal legislation in the welfare field, the social worker worked for a voluntary charitable organization, which tried to meet the most basic economic needs of the very poor. Then, with the advent of social security legislation, this mission was expanded to include social service. Now we are increasingly seeing that the social worker has a vital role in helping dependent people to become self-supporting."

"There are obvious advantages to the taxpayer when families become both economically and emotionally self-supporting but the job is not easy. This seems to me to be the present mission of the social worker."

"The next step is to expand this mission so that social workers can help our great metropolitan areas, now constantly expanding, to develop strengths in individual communities so that today's nuclear family can set down roots in an urban society more complex than ever before in our history."

"I am glad that the National Association of Social Workers is endeavoring to encourage public understanding of the important job that social workers have."

"I hope that many more young people will enter this important and rewarding field. We now have some 10,000 unfilled social work positions in the country, and some 15,000 additional social workers are needed each year to help our growing population with their personal and social problems."

Proud of Bureau

"I am proud to be a part of the Children's Bureau, which has throughout its existence recognized the important job that social workers have to do, and the necessity that they have the training to do it well. Under our program of child welfare services grants last year, some 800 child welfare workers employed in State and local welfare departments were getting training in the special skills to deal with complex human problems."

"In addition to this method of enlarging the pool of trained child welfare workers, we now have the authority, under the 1962 Public Welfare amendments, to offer direct grants to nonprofit institutions of higher learning for the training of a pool of social workers in the field of child welfare."

"Our national effort to reduce dependency and to make families economically and socially productive will depend to a considerable extent on how successful these and other efforts are in filling our social man-power needs."

Republicans Should Not Be Party Of 'Upper Crust,' Says Speaker

Republicans are known as the party of "the upper crust" and this should not be true according to Dr. Edwin R. Durno, former representative to the Congress from this district who talked yesterday noon for the Jackson County unit, Oregon Federation of Women's Republican clubs.

The party's membership should represent all walks of life, the speaker said, and should be made up of craftsmen and labor leaders as well as business and professional men. "Nowadays the plumber is a capitalist," the former congressman said. "If he knows what's good for him, he'll join the Republican party."

Dr. Durno urged his listeners to give their full support to young Republicans, because they are vigorous and forward-looking, and not to leave the party work too much in the hands of the older generation. "Don't think always along old lines," he added.

The former congressman also mentioned that "political power rests in the hands of young women" and not with the men and indicated that women should be fully awake to their political responsibilities.

Speaks As Citizen

Dr. Durno began his talk by saying that he now speaks as a citizen. "I have no ambitions. I don't have to pull my punches and I am holding no fort for any political party," he said, and added that because he is convinced the nation is in the midst of "dangerous times," he believes it is imperative that he share his ideas and opinions gained from two years in the nation's capital.

Describing the physical aspects of Washington, D.C., Dr. Durno said the city is about 55 per cent colored in population, with public schools having about 85 per cent colored pupils. Crime is rampant, he added, with much of the crime traced to Negroes. He said "you and I are partly responsible for this because the congress controls Washington."

He said the city serves as a pipeline from the south and that Negroes go to Washington hunting for work, find little and when they are out of money drift into crime. Unions are partially responsible in that they permit no apprenticeship programs for the colored and keep them out of craft jobs. "Within another decade, the colored people will be the problem of the north and not of the south," he added.

"You cannot bring about moral, social or spiritual changes by passing laws," Dr. Durno said. "Such changes come about slowly." He added that social changes in Washington, D.C., are slowed down even more because of the influence of a small group of men in congress.

Discusses Committees

The former congressman surveyed the numerical makeup of congress, pointing out that congressmen "must constantly run for office" which cuts down the time they can spend on law-making. He discussed the committee system at some length, said "laws are really made in the committees" and pointed out that the important committee chairmanships are assigned on the basis of seniority and not necessarily to the most able.

person. Because the south is a one-party region, most of the chairmanships are now in the hands of southern Democrats, he pointed out.

Dr. Durno spoke of Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, saying that he is an example of a poor chairman who holds an important post through seniority. The speaker also said "there are too many lawyers in the congress" and added that he would like to see more businessmen, teachers, etc., elected to the body. He praised the women in congress, saying they are able and competent lawmakers.

Discussing President Kennedy, Dr. Durno said that he is the one person in the nation "who knows all" and that those citizens of opposite opinions and political parties must remember that he is the symbol of the nation. Dr. Durno said the President's "action baffle his words."

In addition to listening to the President, Dr. Durno urged his audience to listen to key persons in the agencies and departments through which the President gets his information, thereby widening their knowledge of public affairs.

Turning to the United Nations, Dr. Durno said he supports the UN because it is a valuable international political forum, but added that "we should pay our fair share of UN expenses and not more."

This brought applause from the audience. He further said the UN charter should be revised.

Speaking of the nation's economic problems, Dr. Durno declared that "after World War II we helped regenerate other nations, friend and foe alike, we gave money and technical assistance and our practices have resulted in our own economic ills." He believes that foreign aid should be reduced about one-third and said it has been poorly administered.

Dr. Durno praised the Peace corps and declared its activities should be welcomed and increased. "The Peace corps is exporting Americanism and not dollars," he declared. He believes the corps should be highly selective and be operated with exceeding care.

He touched briefly on education, saying that federal aid to schools, particularly for construction, can be helpful in taking the load from property holders. The speaker added that some federal tax relief may come, but that it

Thimble Factory Closes For Lack of Business

By KARL H. MACK

Schorndorf, Germany—(UPI)—The world's oldest and once one of the largest thimble factories is going out of business after 140 years of producing women's fingers.

The firm of Brother Gabler stops production at the end of this month in the "capital of thimble making."

Founder of the plant was silversmith Johann Ferdinand Gabler, son of a Schorndorf tailor. Gabler is reported to be the inventor of the thimble, at least the thimble of modern feature first made in 1807.

In 1824 he got a royal Wuertemberg patent for his thimbles and subsequently started mass production.

First Machine

Equipped with the first self-constructed thimble machine, the new establishment was off to a good start. Soon after Gabler's thimbles were known around the world. In 1914, the Schorndorf factory produced several million thimbles of all sizes and from various metals, including silver and gold.

"In 1914 there were 130 workers in the factory," a plant spokesman said. "But now there are but 20 left. Most of them are occupied packing up the thimbles. There seems to be no more demand for thimbles."

In a few years, he added thoughtfully, "The only trace of thimbles might be found in our plant museum."

Thimble Museum

Over the years, the Schorndorf plant collected at least one sample of every thimble made and displayed it in possibly the world's only thimble museum.

Thimbles and finger protectors of all kinds, sizes and
