Convicts Building Women's Unit as Debate Continues

By ZAN STARK
Salem - (U) Convicts today were busy building the new women's unit at the state penitentiary here while members of the Board of Control and Institutions committee. The measure was introduced by Sen. Ed Fadley (D-Eugene) at the request of the AFL-CIO.

The bill was sent to the committee Feb. 20. No action on it has been taken.

Applying pointed out that state law requires use of prison labor as a rehabilitation measure, and that the Board of Control has operated the institution with that thought in mind for decades.

Organized labor brought suit to halt the work, but the case was thrown out of court by a three-judge panel. The judges ruled labor did not have the legal right to sue the state.

When asked by United Press International if he had changed his views because of the state's tight money situation, Hatfield said "there has been no change in my basic philosophy."

Hatfield said he voted against the use of prison labor because "I felt I had an obligation to our law abiding citizens to create jobs."

"I felt this took precedence over my obligations to the convicts," he said.

Applying held firm to his view.

"I think inmates should be used productively as fully as possible, so long as it is for the direct benefit of the state, not for sale on the open market," he said.

"The program of providing productive and rehabilitative employment for Oregon penitentiary inmates is proceeding uninterred."

The state's institutions now operate a furniture shop, mattress factory, tailor shop, laundry, auto repair shop, print shop, sign shop, do maintenance work, cooking, and manage a complete farm program which produces beef, milk, hogs, eggs, and other crops used to feed wards of the state.

Applying has long believed prisoners should be used on projects such as making signs for the State Highway department.

He said the Kennedy administration has specifically approved the use of prison made signs on federally-sponsored highways.

Applying does not believe prison labor poses any threat to free labor.

"If we worked all 1,500 prisoners on a 40-hour week they would still make up only a tiny fraction of one per cent of the labor force in this state," he said.

A bill to restrict use of prison labor is now being considered by the Senate Public Buildings and Institutions committee. The measure was introduced by Sen. Ed Fadley (D-Eugene) at the request of the AFL-CIO.
