Students Urged To Make Early Study Of College Desires

BY DAVID NYDICK
UPI Education Specialist
Choosing a college is a major decision. The correct choice is basic to an enjoyable and profitable experience. The wrong choice may be unpleasant.

A student who wants to attend a college should begin a careful evaluation during his junior year in high school, or earlier. The first step is an accurate and realistic look at his interests, achievements, and abilities. He should consider the probable course of study to be followed. What are his cultural and social interests.

Consultation Urged
Parents and students should consult with their high school advisors.

Each institution has catalogs and brochures which explain requirements, courses and procedures. These will give a general idea of the type of college. A letter will bring answers to additional questions. If possible, a trip to the campus and a chat with one of the staff members can be helpful. Perhaps a friend has attended the college and can give some information.

The college advisor in a high school is familiar with many colleges. A talk with him can often save many hours of research.

The most important objective is to find a college which meets the student's needs. Make sure that a good variety of courses are offered in the area of major interest. A limited number of basic courses will not be sufficient. Consider the college's prestige in relation to this area.

Unquestionably, there is an increasing competition for admission to colleges. A student's chances for acceptance will be increased by a thorough investigation. A college which meets his needs will more likely want him as a student.

There are several deadlines to meet when applying for admission. These vary with different colleges. Make sure there is sufficient time to complete all applications and examinations. High schools need time to forward transcripts and records. Obtaining letters of recommendation also takes time. Be sure to meet the deadlines.

Some Rejections
In some cases, application may actually be made during the junior year. An acceptance may be obtained which is conditional upon performance in the senior year.

Many individuals will receive some rejections. Competition is strong. Colleges attempt to choose students who seem to have the best chances for success.

Assistance in finding colleges with openings can be obtained from various organizations which act as clearing houses. They will try to match students with appropriate openings. These agencies can be located by checking with high school advisors, public libraries, newspaper information services, and other local directories.

Admission to college can be difficult, so approach the task with a well organized plan.
