Shakespearean Festival Has Annual Winter Staff Meeting

Ashland - Key department heads of the Oregon Shakespearean festival have just concluded the second annual winter staff meeting in Ashland. The 1963 directors and production heads attending the March 29 and 30 conclaves - held at the Mark Antony hotel - came from New York, Pennsylvania, Texas, California, Washington, and Oregon.

Set to open July 24 and play nightly through September 7, the festival's 23rd season will be the longest to date. The recent intensive sessions were called to accelerate the complex planning that precedes a repertory presentation of four Shakespearean plays. Again this summer, the rehearsal period (starting June 6) will be pressed by an extremely tight schedule. Advance conferences between the producing departments are now a vital part of that schedule.

"The meet was even more successful than last year's pilot effort," commented Angus L. Bowmer, producing director, who presided at the event. "We were not only able to determine most production details and make several decisions about work schedules, but we were able to discuss many of the future possibilities for this theater."

Council Sessions
The agenda, arranged to include both general and individual sessions, allowed the play directors to meet in counsel with each of the designers. Broader concepts and group problems were discussed at the combined meetings. Prior to this winter conference idea, all of the detailed coordination was conducted by mail - a slow and difficult method.

Discussions also reached ahead to 1964, when Shakespeare's 400th birthday will be celebrated. As the first of the North American Shakespearean festivals, the Ashland lead role in the world-wide commemorative. Detailed plans will soon be announced.

In attendance were: Edward Brubaker, Lancaster, Pa., director of "Merry Wives of Windsor"; Robert Loper, Stanford, Calif., director of "Romeo and Juliet"; Rod Alexander, Walla Walla, Wash., director of "Love's

Small Worlds Around Us

By LYNN M. WATKINS
(Register and Tribune Syndicate, 1963)

"We're going to double our spending on new plants and equipment in 1963 as compared with 1962," said Lynn A. Townsend, president of Chrysler Corp., during a talk in his office when I was in Detroit recently. "Of course, our capital expenditures are exceedingly small in comparison with General Motors or Ford but..."

"Have you announced that you are?" I interrupted.

"No. When I was asked a question about this at a meeting of the Society of Security Analysts in New York a few weeks ago, all I said was we 'expect that capital expenditures will increase this year over 1962.'"

This is precisely the sort of "upgrading" on plant-equipment spending programs which I think will be taking place in corporations, big and small, across the country in coming months - and if my guess is right, the meaning to all of us will be enormous.

For if business spending does increase more than is now predicted, it would give our entire economy a shot in the arm and just about erase the threat of a recession in the near future.

It would virtually guarantee new economic peaks as the year rolls on, for government spending is rising and consumer spending is rising and when all three types of spending - government, consumer and business - are going up, our economy has no place to go except up.

If then, in addition, Congress votes worthwhile tax reduction to spur more business investment and individual spending, the odds will be considerably enhanced that we'll finally pull ourselves out of this cycle of slow growth and get back into an era of strong expansion.

The latest official survey, made in February, puts business spending on new plants and equipment in 1963 at an all-time peak of $39.1 billion, 5 per cent above 1962 and a comfortable 6 per cent above the previous 1957 peak.

This type of spending is crucially important, has far-reaching effects on jobs, paychecks, profits. Moreover, the spending is scheduled to climb during the year - from a $38 billion rate in the first quarter to almost $40 billion in the second half of 1963. Equally important, the biggest increase - 11 per cent - is being scheduled by the belt-weather durable goods industries.

Still, a 5 per cent rise is only a moderate one, not sufficient to give our economy the boost it needs. In 1962, business spending rose 9 per cent and while 1963 was a prosperous year it wasn't prosperous enough to make a dent in our sticky high unemployment rate.

This is why Townsend's statement is so significant, for if in mid-March he didn't reveal Chrysler's plans to the New York Security Analysts (a group before whom he would want to make the best impression), it's unlikely that he told them to the government's researchers when they queried him in February.

What are the chances that other business spending plans will be hiked? Very good.

General Motors' chairman Frederic G. Donner has announced an increase in GM's capital investments of $55 million this year to a total of $700 million. An exceedingly informed guess is that this figure will turn out to be closer to $750 million. Ford has announced its worldwide capital expenditures of $400 million in 1963 against $280 million last year. The way auto sales are running and auto production is being projected, this estimate also could become an under-estimate by year end.

The bright signals are increasing. In the fourth quarter of 1962, the nation's biggest manufacturers authorized the largest amount of spending for new plants and equipment since early 1957. The liberalized depreciation writeoffs and the tax credit Washington gave to businessmen last year to spur their investments are having an increasingly favorable impact as the management's figure out all the subtleties.

Any increase over the projected 5 per cent in this vital area of spending will help lift us off today's plateau.

Now if Congress will get to work on a substantial across-the-board tax reduction to give new incentives to business-risk-taking and consumer spending, today's sluggishness could well turn into tomorrow's strength.
